CONSPURCATION. n. s. [from conspurco, Latin] The act of defiling, defilement, pollution.

CONSTABLE. n. s. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed]
1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown, long disused in England, but lately subsisting in France; where the constable commanded the marshals, and was the first officer of the army. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blasphemy of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary 'till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferiour constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables, because cognisance of pleas, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of like nature, but inferiour authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as constable of the Tower, of Dover castle, of the castle of Carnarvon, but these are properly castellans, or governours of castles. Cowel. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shak.
The knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch. Shak. sp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The constable being a sober man, and known to be an enemy to those acts of sedition, went among them, to observe what they did. Clarendon.

2. To over run the CONSTABLE [Perhaps from conte stable, Fr. the settled, firm and stated account] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth. A low phrase.

CONSTABLESHIP. n. s. [from constable.] The office of a constable.

CONSTANCY. n. s. [constantia, Latin]
1. Immutability, perpetuity, unalterable continuance.
The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker, b. 1.
2. Consistency, uniform state.
Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation
3. Resolution, firmness, steadiness, unshaken determination.
In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat,
In vain the syrens sing, the tempests beat. Prior.
4. Lasting affection, continuance of love, or friendship.
Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.
5. Certainty; veracity, reality
But all the story of the night told over,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shakespeare.

CONSTANT adj. [constans, Latin.]
1. Firm; fixed; not fluid
If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body Boyle's History of Firmness.
2. Unvaried, unchanged, immutable, durable.
3. Firm, resolute; determined; immoveable, unshaken.
Some shrewd contents,
Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
4. Free from change of affection.
But a loving one still maid, they yet remained constant friends. Sidney, b.
5. Certain, not various, steady; firmly adherent.
Now, through the lands, his care of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd,
Still constant to his call;
By many followed, loved by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.
He shewed his firm adherence to religion as modelled by our national constitution, and was constant to its offices in devotion, both in publick and in his family. Addison, Freeholder.

CONSTANTLY adv. [from constant] Unvariably, perpetually; certainly, steadily.

COPPED. adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

It was broad in its basis, and role copped like a sugar-loaf. Wiseman's Surgery.

COPPEL. n. f. [This word is variously spelt; as cupel, cupel, cuple, and cuppel, but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed, to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and exposing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in drossy, which which is called the lithargo of gold and silver. The refiners call the copel a test. Harris.

COPPER. n. f. [coper, Dut. cuprum, Lat.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal, and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and

Copper is heavier than iron or tin, but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. It is not unfrequently found native in a malleable state, but in small quantities. In the state of ore it makes, according to its various admixtures, many very different appearances. The richer copper ores are found in many parts of Germany and Sweden, and we have some in England little inferior to the finest Swedish. Hill on

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Exon, vi. 2

COPPER. n. f. A vessel made of copper, commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half, then they [illegible] into earthen vessels. Bacon's Natural History, N° [illegible]

COPPER-NOSE. n. f. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

The having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief have Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida

Gutta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, looks red, and rise in great weals, rendering the visage fiery; and, progress of time, make copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wiseman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. f. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the better impression distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. f. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

This sort is like those now wrought at the copper works [illegible]

[illegible], couperose, Fr. supposed to [illegible] in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol, the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an [illegible] vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the seashore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which are first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. When the boiling is finished, the liquor is drawn off into coolers, where it shoots into crystals of a fine green colour. This factitious copperas, in many respects, perfectly agrees with the native green vitriol of Germany, and is used in dying hats and cloths black, and in making ink. Chambers. Inst.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transmuted, from the cognation of copperas with [illegible]

COPPERSMITH. n. f. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Abhorrèus, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad coppersmith of Ilia,
Up at his forge by morning peep. Swift.

COPPERWORM. n. f. [teredo, in Latin.]
1. A little worm in ships.
A moth that frets garments.
2. A worm breeding in one's hand.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper, made of copper.

[illegible] impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the [illegible] metal off, [illegible] neighbouring [illegible]

COPPICE. n. f. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] Low woods cut at stated times for fuel; a place over-run with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was boarded both with high timber trees, and copses of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand, where you may have the arrest shot. Shakesp.

In coppice woods, if you leave staddles too thick, they will run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon's Henry VII.

The willows and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen,
Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortim.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coalmines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. f. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or copple-dust, by pouncing into the quicksilver. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more copped. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. f. [abbreviated from coppice.] Short wood cut at a certain growth for fuel, a place overgrown with short wood.

The East quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,
His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden's Fables.

To COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copsing wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift's Address to Parliament.

COPULA. n. f. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition; as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition, it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logick.

To COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon, Essay 40.

To COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Wiseman's Surgery.

COPULATION. n. f. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as [illegible]

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions; as, riches and honours are temptations to pride. Cæsar conquered the Gauls and the Britons: neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts's Logick.

COPY. n. f. [copia, Fr. copia, low Latin. Quod cuipiam facile est copia exercendi. Junius much inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κοπος, labour, because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Denham.

He slept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for the copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift on the Different in Athens and Rome.

2. An individual book, one of many books, as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker, b. v. ſect. 22.

3. The autograph, the original, the archetype; that from which any thing is co:

It was the copy of our conference:
In bed he slept not, for my urging it;
At board he fed not, for my urging it. Shak. Com. of Err.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters of the vulgar alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives,
But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. f. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. f. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court. for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of [illegible] is called the court-roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord, yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor, so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary in one point or other, almoſt in every manor. Some copy-holds are freable, and ſome certain: that which is freable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleaſes, when the tenant is admitted into it: the which is certainly a taking of inheritance, and called in many places cuſtomary, becauſe the tenant dying, and the head being void, the next of blood paying the cuſtomary fine, as two billings for an acre, or ſo cannot be denied his admiſſion. Some copy holders have, by cuſtom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not ha Some hold by the verge in ancient demeſne, who though they hold by copy, yet are they, to account, a kind of freeholders for, if ſuch a one commit felony, the king has annum, diem, & vaſtum, as in caſe of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold, and they committing felony, forfeit their eſtates to the lord of the manor. Cowel.

If a cuſtomary tenant die, the widow ſhall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addiſ. Spectat.

COPY-HOLDER n. ſ. [from copy-hold.] One that is poſſeſſed of land in copy-hold.

To COPY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tranſcribe; to write after an original.

He who hears a harmleſs neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lie, lame ſlander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope's Eſſay.

2. To imitate; to propoſe to imitation; to endeavour to reſemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this deſign of copying it out, poſſeſſes himſelf of one of the greateſt advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their ſouls inflame,
To copy out their great forefathers fame. Dryd. K. Arthur.

To copy her few nymphs aſpir'd,
Her verſes fewer ſwains admir'd. Swift.

To COPY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of ſomething elſe.

Some imagine, that whatſoever they find in the picture of a maſter, who has acquired reputation, muſt of neceſſity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

2. It has ſometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, ſeem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addiſon's Spectator.

To COQUET'. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderneſs.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to ſee how the gameſters play, and I raking at you both. Swift.

[illegible]
Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was marry'd to the Tunbridge beau,
I ſaw coquetting t'other night,
In pidnuck, with that odious knight. Swift.

COQUETRY. n. ſ. [coqueterie, French.] Affectation of amorous advances, deſire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could deſire in female companions, without a daſh of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addiſ. Spect.

COQUETTE. n. ſ. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in ſylphs aloft repair,
And ſport and flutter in the fields of air. Pope's Ra. of Lock.

A coquette and a tinder box are ſparkled. Arbuthn. and Pope.

CORACLE. n. ſ. [corwgl, Welſh, probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat uſed in Wales by fiſhers; made by drawing leather or oil'd cloath upon a frame of wicker work.

CORAL. n. ſ. [corallum, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of great hardneſs and ſtony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long expoſure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is ſoft, while in the ſea, proceeds from a ſoft and thin coat, of a cruſtaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for uſe. This external bark is of a fungous ſpongy texture, of a yellowiſh or greeniſh colour, and is full of an acrid juice reſembling milk. It covers every part of the plant, and is eaſily ſeparated from the internal or ſtony part by friction, while it is moiſt, but adheres to it very firmly, if ſuffered to dry on it. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variouſly ramified. It is thickeſt at the ſtem, and its branches grow gradually ſlender to the extremities. It grows to ſtones, or any other hard ſubſtances, without a root, or without any way penetrating them, as plants do the earth. It has been doubted whether corals were properly a plant or not; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nouriſhment in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and ſeeds, or at leaſt a matter analogous to ſeeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. The ancients aſcribed great virtues to red coral, but now it is only uſed internally as an aſtringent and abſorbent, with other medicines of the ſame intention. We hear of white coral, of which the ancients make no mention; and what is ſold under this name is a ſpecies of the madrepora, another ſea-plant. There is a black coral of the ſame ſtony ſubſtance with the red, and as gloſſy as the blackeſt marble, but what is ſold in the ſhops under that name, is a plant of a different genus, and of a tough horny texture. Ellis's Eſſay on Coralline.

In the ſea, upon the ſouth weſt of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a ſubmarine plant. It hath no leaves, only when it is under water. It is ſoft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becomes hard and ſtrong red, as we ſee. Ray's Natural Hiſtory, N° 72.

This gentleman, deſirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the ſea, with expreſs orders to take notice whether it were hard or ſoft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errours, p. 154.

He hears the crackling ſound of coral woods,
And ſees the ſecret ſource of ſubterraneous floods. Dryd. Æn.

A turret was incloſed
Within the wall, of alabaſter white,
And crimſon coral, for the queen of night,
Who rules in Sylvan ſports her chaſte delight. Dryden.

Or where's the ſenſe, ſtrict or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to aſſiſt them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew,
The bells ſhe gingled. Pope.

CORAL-TREE n. ſ. [corallodendron, Latin.]

It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful ſcarlet flowers, but never any ſeeds in the European gardens. Miller.

CORALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Latin.] Conſiſting of coral, approaching to coral.

At ſuch time as the ſea is agitated, it takes up into itſelf terreſtrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes more quiet and calm. Woodward on Foſſils.

CORALLINE. n. ſ. [from the adjective.]

Coralline is a ſea-plant uſed in medicine, but much inferiour to the coral in hardneſs. It is naturally very ramoſe or branched, and forms a bunch of filaments two or three inches long, and each of them of the thickneſs of a ſmall packthread, and jointed. They are ſometimes greeniſh, ſometimes yellowiſh, often reddiſh, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a ſort of ſand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owſe, which they are forced to remove before they can come to the bed of ſand. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CORALLOID, CORALLOIDAL. adj. [κοραλλοειδης.] Reſembling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are compoſed of plates ſet lengthways of the body, and paſſing from the ſurface to the axis of it. Woodward on Foſſils.

CORANT. n. ſ. [courant, French.] A nimble ſprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jigg; ſo in converſation, even, eaſy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as ſoon believe a widow in great grief for her huſband, becauſe I ſaw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walſh.

CORBAN. n. ſ. [קרבן.] An alms-baſket; a receptacle of charity, a gift, an alms.

They think to ſatisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of reading on. King Charles.

Corban ſtands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews ſometimes ſwore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to uſe it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them neceſſary ſubſiſtence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by conſecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Goſpel, with theſe unchariteble religious vows. By this word ſuch perſons were likewiſe meant as devoted themſelves to the ſervice of God and the temple. Corban ſignifies alſo the treaſury of the temple where the offerings, which were made in money, were depoſited. Calmet.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, French.] Crooked.

For feare thy head very totter is,
So thy corbe ſhoulder it leans amiſs. Spenſer's Paſtorals.

CORBELS. n. ſ. Little baſkets uſed in fortification, filled with earth, and ſet upon the parapet, to ſhelter the men in firing upon the beſiegers.

CORBEL. n. ſ. [In architecture.] The repreſentation of a baſket, ſometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

CORBEL. CORBIL. } n. ſ.

n. A ſhort piece of timber ſticking out ſix or eight inches from a wall, ſometimes placed for ſtrength under the ſemi-girders of a platter

2 A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or ſtatues. Chambers

CORD n. ſ. [cord, Welſh; chorda, Latin; corde, French.]

1. A rope, a ſtring compoſed of ſeveral ſtrands or twiſts.

Such ſmiling rogues as theſe,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intrinſicate t' unlooſe Shakeſpeare's King Lear

She let them down by a cord through the window. Joſ

Form'd of the fineſt compoſited thread,
Theſe numerous cords are through the body ſpread. Blackm.

2. The cords extended in ſetting up tents, furniſh ſeveral metaphors in ſcripture.

Thine eyes ſhall ſee Jeruſalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that ſhall not be taken down, none of the ſtakes thereof ſhall ever be removed, neither ſhall any of the cords thereof be broken. Iſaiah, xxxiii. 20

3 A quantity of wood for fuel, ſuppoſed to be meaſured with a cord, a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD MAKER. n. ſ. [cord and make] One whoſe trade is to make ropes, a ropemaker

CORD-WOOD. n. ſ. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be ſold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes, to faſten with cords; to cloſe by a bandage.

The ſailor, and the pilot to the helm. Thomſon's Winter.

CO'RDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,
To climb celeſtial Silvia's chamber-window. Shakeſpeare.

CORDELI'ER. n. ſ. A Franciſcan friar; ſo named from the cord which ſerves him for a cincture

And who to aſſiſt but a grave cordelier Prior

CORDIAL. n. ſ. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increaſes the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increaſes ſtrength.

A cordial, properly ſpeaking, is not always what increaſeth the force of the heart, for, by increaſing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diſeaſes. Whatever increaſeth the natural or animal ſtrength, the force of moving the fluids and muſcles, is a cordial: theſe are ſuch ſubſtances as bring the ſerum of the blood into the propereſt condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal ſubſtances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholſome but not pungent taſte. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilerates.

Then with ſome cordials ſeek for to appeaſe
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body ſhall have ſhortly eaſe;
But ſuch ſweet cordials paſs phyſicians art. Spenſer
Comfort, like cordials after death, comes late. Dryden
Your warrior offſpring that upheld the crown,
The ſcarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the moſt pleaſing objects I can find,
Charms to my ſight, and cordials to my mind. Dryd.

CORDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving, invigorating; reſtorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death. I do not know
What is more cordial Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infuſed ſometimes purgatives. Wiſeman's Surgery.

2. Sincere, hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocriſy.

Doctrines are infuſed among Chriſtians, which are apt to obſtruct or intercept the cordial ſuperſtructing of Chriſtian life or renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

With looks of cordial love,
Hung over her enamour'd. Milton.

CORDIALITY. n. ſ. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any ſuch reſpect of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocriſy

CO'RDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely, heartily, without hypocriſy

Where a ſtrong inveterate love of ſin has made any doctrine or propoſition, wholly unwelcome to the heart, no argument or demonſtration, no nor miracle whatſoever, ſhall be able to bring the heart cordially to cloſe with and receive it. South's Sermons.

CORDINER. n. ſ. [cordonnier, French.] A ſhoemaker. It is ſo uſed in divers ſtatutes. Cowel.

CORDON. n. ſ. [French.] In fortification, a row of ſtones jutting out before the rampart at the baſis of the parapet. Chambers.

CO'RDWAIN. n. ſ. [cordouan Catalan, from Cordova in Spain.] Spaniſh leather.

Her ſtraight legs muſt bravely wear
In golden buſkins of coſtly cordwain

CORDWAINER. n. ſ. [Uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spaniſh leather, or from cord, of which ſhoes were formerly made, and are now uſed in the Spaniſh Weſt Indies. Tuſcan.] A ſhoemaker

CORE. n. ſ. [cœur, French; cor, Latin.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man
That is not paſſion's ſlave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart Shak. Hamlet

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the ſquare he raiſed a tower of a furlong high Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World

They waſteful eat,
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core Thomſon.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels

It is reported that trees, watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or ſtone. Bac.

4. The matter contained in a boil or ſore

Launce the ſore,
And cut the head; for, 'till the core be found,
The ſecret vice is fed, and gathers ground. Dryd. Virgil.

5. It is uſed by Baron for a body or collection [from corps, French, pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raiſing of forces to reſiſt the rebels, than of the reſiſtance itſelf, for that he was in a core of people whoſe affections he ſuſpected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Latin.]

1. Conſiſting of leather

2. Of a ſubſtance reſembling leather

A ſtronger projectile motion of the blood muſt occaſion greater ſecretions and loſs of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps ſpiſſitude and coriaceous concretions. Arbuthnot on Alim.

CORIA'NDER n. ſ. [coriandrum, Latin.]

It hath a fibroſe annual root: the lower leaves are broad, but the upper leaves are deeply cut into five ſegments: the petals of the flower are unequal, and ſhaped like an heart: the fruit is compoſed of two hemiſpherical, and ſometimes ſpherical ſeeds. The ſpecies are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller teſt culated coriander. The firſt is cultivated for the ſeeds, which are uſed in medicine, the ſecond ſort is ſeldom found. Miller.

Iſrael called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander ſeed, white. Exod. xvi. 31.

CO'RINTH. n. ſ. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A ſmall fruit commonly called currant.

The chief riches of Zant conſiſteth in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities. Brown's Notes on the Odyſſ.

CORINTHIAN Order, is generally reckoned the fourth, but by ſome the fifth, of the five orders of architecture, and is the moſt noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius aſcribes it to Calimachus, a Corinthian ſculptor, who is ſaid to have taken the hint by paſſing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a baſket with ſome of her playthings had been placed by her nurſe, and covered with a tile, the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it ſprung up, the branches encompaſſed the baſket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of a volute. Hence Calimachus imitated the baſket by the vaſe of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. This ſtory is treated as a fable by Vitruvius, who imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whoſe leaves were thoſe of the palm-tree. This order is diſtinguiſhed from the reſt by ſeveral characters. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little ſtalks ariſe, of which the ſixteen volutes are formed, which ſupport the abacus. Harris.

Behind theſe figures are large columns of the Corinthian Order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryden.

CORK. n. ſ. [cortex, Lat. kork, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, feſtus
Corticem adſtrictum pice dimovebit
Amphorae, fumum bibere inſtitutae
Conſule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all reſpects like the ilex, except the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, ſpongy, and ſoft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in ſeveral parts of Italy, and the North of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree uſed for ſtopples, or burnt into Spaniſh black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the ſtopple of a bottle or barrel.

I pr'ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakeſpeare's As you like it

Be ſure, nay very ſure, thy cork be good,
Then future ages ſhall of Peggy tell,
That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale ſo well. King.

Nor ſtop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay. Pope.

CORKING-PIN n. ſ. A pin of the largeſt ſize.

When you put a clean pillow-caſe on your lady's pillow, be ſure to faſten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night. Swift's Direct. to the Chambermaid.

Hagal er kalnaſtur corna
Hail is the coldeſt grain.]

1. The ſeeds which grow in ears, not in pods; ſuch as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone. John xii. 25.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Sh. Coriolan.

2. Grain yet unreaped, ſtanding in the field upon its ſtalk.

Why he was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our ſuſtaining corn. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almoſt ripe. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

Still a murmur runs
Along the ſoft inclining fields of corn. Thomſon's Autumn.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthreſhed.

Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of corn cometh in in his ſeaſon. Job, v. 26.

4. An excreſcence on the feet, hard and painful; probably ſo called from its form, though by ſome ſuppoſed to be denominated from its corneous or horny ſubſtance.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakeſp.

The man that makes his toe,
What he his heart ſhould make,
Shall of a corn cry woe,
And turn his ſleep to wake. Shakſpeare's King Lear.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do engrieve either towards rain or towards froſt. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The hardeſt part of the corn is uſually in the middle, thruſting itſelf in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavus. Wiſeman's Surgery.

He firſt that uſeful ſecret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gath'ring rain. Gay's Paſt

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in ſome parts as corns do. Locke.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,
An offer'd fee from Radcliff ſcorns. Swift.

To CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ſalt; to ſprinkle with ſalt. The word is ſo uſed, as Skinner obſerves, by the old Saxons.

2. [illegible]

CORN FIELD. n. ſ. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his laſs,
That o'er the green corn-field did paſs. Shakeſ. As you like it.

Your foot-boy with your livery of ſtars and garters, trumpets, and ſtandards waving over your brother's cornfields. Pope.

CORN-FLAG n. ſ. [corn and flag.]

It hath a fleſhy double tuberoſe root: the leaves are like thoſe of the fleur-de-lys. the flower conſiſts of one leaf, ſhaped like a lily, open at the top, in two lips; the upper imbricated, the under divided into five ſegments. the ovary becomes an oblong fruit, divided into three cells, filled with roundiſh ſeeds wrapt up in a cover. Miller enumerates eleven ſpecies of this plant, ſome with red flowers, and ſome with white. It is a proper ornament for borders.

Thou haſt loved a reward upon every corn-floor. Hoſ ix. 1.

CORN-FLOWER. n. ſ. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come ſeldom or never in other places, unleſs they be ſet, but only amongſt corn, as the blue-bottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and fumatory. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 482.

Corn flowers are of many ſorts: ſome of them flower in June and July, and others in Auguſt. The ſeeds ſhould be ſown in March. they require a good ſoil. Mortimer's Husband.

CORN-LAND. n. ſ. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Paſtures and meadows are of ſuch advantage to huſbandry, that many prefer them to corn-lands. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. ſ. [corn and maſter.] One that cultivates corn for ſale.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greateſt audits of any man in my time; a great grazier, a great ſheep-maſter, a great timberman, a great collier, a great corn-maſter, and a great leadman. Bacon, Eſſay 35.

CORN MARIGOLD. n. ſ. [from corn and marigold.]

It hath an annual root, the cup of the flower is hemiſpherical and ſcaly: the flowers are radiated; the rays being, for the moſt part, of a yellow flower, and the ſeeds are furrowed. Miller.

CORN-MILL. n. ſ. [corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raiſe large hammers. Mort. Husband.

CORN-PIPE. n. ſ. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by ſlitting the joint of a green ſtalk of corn.

Now the ſhrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,
To rank and file reduce the ſtraggling ſwarms. Tickl.

CORN-ROCKET n. ſ. [from corn and rocket.]

The flower conſiſts of four leaves, in form of a croſs: the pointal becomes a four-cornered fruit, reſembling a creſted club, divided into four cells, in which are contained roundiſh ſeeds with a beak. This plant grows wild in the warm parts of France and Spain. Miller.

CORN-ROSE. n. ſ. See POPPY, of which it is a ſpecies.

CORN SALLAD. n. ſ. [from corn and ſallad.]

The leaves grow by pairs oppoſite on the branches, which are always divided into two parts, and appear at the top like an umbrella. The flower conſiſts of one leaf, cut into many ſegments, and ſucceeded by one naked ſeed, having no down adhering to it, in which it differs from the valerian. Some ſorts of it grow wild. Miller.

Corn-ſallad is an herb, whoſe top-leaves are a ſalad of themſelves. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'RNAGE. n. ſ. [from corne, Fr. cornu, Latin.] A tenure which obliges the landhouſer to give notice of an invaſion by blowing a horn.

CO'RNEL. } n. ſ. [cornus, Latin.] See CORNELIAN
CORNELIAN TREE } CHERRY.

The Cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree as the cornelian ſtone, the colour whereof it ſomewhat repreſents. The fruit is good in the kitchen and conſervatory. The wood is very durable, and uſeful for wheelwork. Mortim. Husbandry.

Take a ſervice-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harſh and binding juice, and ſet them near a vine or fig tree, and ſee whether the grapes or figs will not be the ſweeter. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 485.

Mean time the goddeſs, in diſdain, beſtows
The maſt and acorn, brutal food! and ſtrows
The fruits of cornel, as they feaſt around. Pope's Odyſſey.

CO'RNEL. } n. ſ. [cornus, Latin.]
CORNELIAN CHERRY. }

The flower-cup conſiſts of four ſmall rigid leaves, expanded in form of a croſs, from the center of which are produced many ſmall yellowiſh flowers, conſiſting of four leaves, diſpoſed in form of an umbrella: theſe flowers are ſucceeded by fruit, oblong or of a cylindrical form, ſomewhat like an olive, containing an hard ſtone, which is divided into two cells, each containing a ſingle ſeed. The ſpecies are ten, of which the cornelian-cherry, or male cornel-tree, is very common, being propagated for its fruit, which, by many people, is preſerved to make tarts: it is alſo uſed in medicine as an aſtringent and cooler. There is likewiſe an officinal preparation of this fruit, called Rob de cornus. Dogberry, or gatten-tree, is very common in hedges, and the fruit of this plant is often brought into the markets, and ſold for buckthornberries; but in this fruit is but one ſtone, and in the buckthorn four. The ſaſſafras ſort is a native of America; and its root is much uſed in England to make a tea, which is greatly commended by ſome againſt violent defluxions. Moſt of the other ſorts are brought from America, except what is commonly called the dwarf honeyſuckle, which grows wild on the high mountains in the northern counties, but is with difficulty preſerved in gardens. Miller.

On wildings and on ſtrawberries they feaſt,

Cu-

Cornels and brambleberries gave the reſt,
And fall'ng acorns furniſh'd out a feaſt. Dryden's Ovid.

CORPOREAL. adj. [corporeus, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial. See CORPORAL.

The ſwiftneſs of thoſe circles attribute,
Though numberleſs, to his omnipotence,
That to corporeal ſubſtances can add
Speed almoſt ſpiritual. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii.

Having ſurveyed the image of God in the ſoul, we are not to omit thoſe characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a ſpiritual ſubſtance could be pictured upon a corporeal. South's Sermons.

God being ſuppoſed to be a pure ſpirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal taſte. Tillotſon.

The courſe is finiſh'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal priſon freed. Dryden's Fables.

Eye thy corporeal and internal eye
On the young gras, or new engender'd fly
2. It is uſed by Sturſt inaccurately for corporeus.

I am not in a condition to make a true ſlop even on Amſbury Downs, and I declare, that a corporeal falſe ſlop is worſe than a political one. Sturſt

CORPOREITY. n. ſ. [from corporeus, Latin.] Materiality; the ſtate of being embodied, the act of having a body, bodineſs

Since philoſophy affirmeth, that we are middle ſubſtances between the ſoul and the body, they muſt partake of ſome corporeity which lappeth weight or gravity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

It is the ſaying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing between the upper hemiſphere of immaterial intellects and this lower of corporeity. Glanville's Sc. pſ. c. iv.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other ſhape and figure Stillingfleet.

CORPORIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpable

To CO'RPORIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To embody, to aſſimilate into body

CORPSE. }

1. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little ſeems
To ſtuff this man, this vaſt unwieldy corps. Addiſon.
He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That ſcorns his brittle corps, and ſeems aſham'd
He's not all ſpirit. Dryden's Don Sebaſtian.

2. A carcaſe; a dead body, a corſe.

Not a friend greet
My poor corps, where my bones ſhall be thrown. Shakeſp.
There was the murder'd corps in covert
And violent death in thouſand ſhapes diſplay'd. Dryd. Fables
See where the corps of thy dead ſon approaches Addiſon.

The corpſe was laid out upon the floor by the [illegible] command. He then bid every one light his flambeau, and ſtand about the dead body. Addiſon's Guardian, N°. 69.

3. A body of forces.

CO'RPULENCE. } n. ſ. [corpulentia, Latin.]
CO'RPULENCY }

1. Bulkineſs of body, fleſhineſs; fulneſs of fleſh.

To what a cumberſome unwieldineſs
And burdenous corpulence my love had grown, Donne.

It is but one ſpecies of corpulency, for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muſcular fleſh, the caſe of robuſt people. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Groſſneſs; groſſneſs of matter.

The muſculous fleſh ſerves for the vibration of the tail, the heavineſs and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray on the Creation

CO'RPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.] Fleſhy, bulky; having great bodily bulk

We ſay it is a fleſhy ſtile, when there is much periphraſis, and circuit of words; and when with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent Ben. Jonſon's Diſcoveries.

Exceſs of nouriſhment is hurtful, for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon

CO'RPUSCLE. n. ſ. [corpuſculum, Lat.] A ſmall body; a particle of matter, an atom, a little fragment.

It will add much to our ſatisfaction, if thoſe corpuſcles be diſcovered with microſcopes.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuſcles that compoſe and diſtinguiſh different bodies? Watts's Logick.

CORPUSCULAR } adj. [from corpuſculum, Lat.] Relating CORPUSCULARIAN } to the diſtinguiſhing epithet of that philoſophy which attempts the rational ſolution of all phyſical appearances by the action of one body upon another

As to natural philoſophy I do not expect to ſee any principles propoſed, more comprehenſive and intelligible than the corpuſcularian or mechanical. Boyle.

This may be ſaid, that the modern corpuſcularians talk, in moſt things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks. Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuſcular philoſophy, though peradventure the eldeſt, as well as the beſt in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Boyle's Serm.

CO'RRACLE. See CORRICLE.

To CORRA'DE v. a [corrado, Latin.] To rub off, to wear away by frequent rubbing; to ſcrape together.

CORRADIA'TION n. ſ. [con and radius, Lat.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impreſſion of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or rectitudines, whereof the baſis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; ſo as there is a corradiation, and conjunction of beams. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 7.

To CORRECT v. a. [corrigo correctum, Latin.]

1. To puniſh, to chaſtiſe, to ſcourge.

Sad accidents, and a ſtate of affliction, is a ſchool of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of ſinning Taylor.

After

After he has once been corrected for a lie, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him. Locke on Education

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them, when they do amiss. Locke on Education.

2. To amend; to take away faults, in writings or life.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Preface.

[illegible] to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.

I wrote, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern; to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another; or by any method of preparation.

As in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink: its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness, free from faults

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this;
Which he presumes the most correct of his. Dryd. Aur. Prol.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense and language is complete. Felton on the Classicks.

CORRE'CTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment, discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shakesp. Rich. II.

An offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. 1.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue. Watts.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery. Brown.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she always gave good counsel, but often too gentle correction. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary

To make courts hot, ambitious, wholesome, do not take
A dram of country's dulness; do not add
Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Donne.

CORRE'CTIONER. n. f. [from correction.] One that has been in the house of correction; a jayl-bird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare

I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished correctioner. Shakesp. Henry IV.

CORRE'CTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Medicines are pectoral, corrective of the bilious acid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CORRE'CTIVE n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food. Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow. South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment, which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CORRE'CTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; appositely; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools. Locke on Education.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

CORRE'CTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties [illegible]

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air and posture, and the correctness of design in this statue, are inexpressible. Addison on Italy.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war. Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness. Swift.

CORRE'CTOR. n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin? How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion. Sprat's Sermons.

With all his faults he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the press, that amends the errours committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a bouge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the luxivial salts prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes, whereby they sometimes occasion intolerable gripings; and as spices and carminative seeds also assist in the easier operation of some cathartick, by dissipating collections of wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector which destroys or diminishes a quality that it could not otherwise be dispensed with, thus turpentines are correctors of quicksilver, by destroying its fluidity, and making it capable of mixture; and thus rectified spirit of wine breaks off the points of some acids, so as to make them become safe and good remedies, which before were destructive. Quincy.

To CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CO'RRELATE n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate. South's Sermons.

CORRE'LATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other. South's Sermons.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORRE'PTION n. f. [corripio correptum, Latin.] Objurgation; chiding, reprehension, reproof.

If we must needs be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction and backbiting into admonition and fraternal correption. Government of the Tongue, sect. 6.

To CORRESPOND. v. n. [con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer, to be proportionate, to be adequate to; to be adapted; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively through all the year, are found to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time. Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any further than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no further than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE } CORRESPO'NDENCY. } n. f. [from correspond.]

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the others more perfect direction. Hooker, b. i.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations keep the same to one another. Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my king- King Charles.

Sure they have held a correspondence
With the enemy, and thus they would betray us. Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert [illegible] Addison on Italy.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state. Bacon, Essay 17.

CORRESPO'NDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable, adapted; agreeable, answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep. Hooker.

And as five zones th' ethereal regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd. Dryden's Ovid.

CORRESPO'NDENT. n. s. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad. Denham's Dedication.

CORRESPO'NSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,
And correspondive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperre up the sons of Troy. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

CO'RRIDOR. n. s. [French.]

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long isle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other. Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost entirely ruined. Addison on Italy.

CORRI'GIBLE. adj. [from corrige, Latin.]

1. That which may be altered or amended.

2. He who is a proper object of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language. Howel's Vocal Forest.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will. Shakespeare's Othello.

CORRI'VAL. n. s. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other. Spenser on Ireland.

He that doth redeem her thence, might wear

CORRI'VALRY. n. s. [from corrival.] Competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits, and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and [illegible]ent. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 901.

To CORRO'BORATE. v. a. [con and robore, Latin.]

1. [illegible], to establish

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom. Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it. Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgment. Watton.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby. Watts.

CORROBORA'TION. n. s. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength

CORRO'BORATIVE. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent facuity; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried. Wiseman's Surgery.

To CORRO'DE. v. a. [corrado, Latin.] To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad;
For so all thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will. Donne.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrease, is wont to reduce it to a green blue solution. Boyle on Colours.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding revolutions of so long a time. Burnet's Origin of Mankind.

Hannibal the Pyreneans past,
And steepy Alps, the mounds that nature cast,
And with corroding juices, as he went,
A passage through the living rock he rent. Dryd. Juvenal.

Fishes, which neither chew their meat nor grind it in their stomachs, do, by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus. Ray on the Creation.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind. Arbuth.

Through the heart,
Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,
'Tis then delightful misery no more,
But agony unmixt, incessant gall,
Corroding every thought, and blasting all
Love's paradise. Thomson's Spring, l. 1075

CORRO'DENT. adj. [from corrode.] Having the power of corroding or wasting any thing away

CORRO'DIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed or corroded.

Metals, although corrodible by waters, yet will not suffer a liquation from the powerfulest heat communicable unto that element. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

CO'RRODY. n. s. [from corrodo, Latin.] A deputation from an allowance or salary for some other than the original purpose.

In those days even noble persons, and other meaner men, ordered corrodies and pensions to their chaplains and servants out of churches. Ayliffe's Parer.

CORROSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from corrosible.] The quality of being corrosible; possibility to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORRO'SIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORRO'SION. n. s. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid, or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstruums here employed, have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved; so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstruums, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies [illegible] and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Ibid.

If there be any medicine that purgeth, and hath not of the first two manifest qualities, it is to be held suspected as a kind of poison; for that it worketh either by corrosion or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature [illegible]

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the [illegible] and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Woodward.

CORROSIVE. adj. [from corrode, Latin. It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

Gold, after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cosmol. b. 1. c. 2. s. 1.

The sacred sons of vengeance, on whose course
Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year. Thomson's Spring.

2. Having the quality to fret or vex

If the maintenance of ceremonies be a corrosive to such as oppugn them, undoubtedly to such as maintain them it can be no great pleasure, when they behold that which they reverence is oppugned. Hooker, b. iv. sect. 10.

CORROSIVE. n. s.

1. That which has the quality of wasting any thing away, as [illegible]

He meant his corrosives to apply,

2. That which has the power of fretting, or of giving pain

Such speeches savour not of God in him that useth them, and unto virtuously disposed minds they are grievous correctives. Hooker, b. v. sect. 33

Away; though parting be a fretful corrosive,
It is applied to a deathful wound Shakesp. Henry VI. p. 1.

There is no cure, but rather corrosive,
For things that are not to be remedied. Shakesp. Henry VI.

CORROSIVELY. adv. [from corrosive.]

I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

But stay, I smell a man of middle earth;
With trial fire touch me his finger-end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shak. M. W. of Windsor.

Language being the conduit whereby men convey their knowledge, he that makes an ill use of it, though he does not corrupt the fountains of knowledge, which are in things, yet he stops the pipes. Locke.

Hear the black trumpet through the world proclaim,
That not to be corrupted is the shame. Pope.

3. To spoil; to do mischief.

To CORRUPT. v. n. To become putrid; to grow rotten; to putrefy.

The aptness or propension of air or water to corrupt or putrefy, no doubt, is to be found before it break forth into manifest effects of diseases, blasting, or the like. Bacon.

CORRUPT. adj. [from corrupt.] Vitious; tainted with wickedness; without integrity.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying. Eph. iv. 29.

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire. Sh. M. W. of Wind.

These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants. Shakesp. King Lear.

Some, who have been corrupt in their morals, have yet been infinitely solicitous to have their children piously brought up. South's Sermons.

CORRUPTER. n. f. [from corrupt.] He that taints or vitiates; he that destroys purity or integrity.

What is here?
The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus,
All turn'd to heresy? Away, away,
Corrupters of my faith! Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

From the vanity of the Greeks, the corrupters of all truth, who, without all ground of certainty, vaunt their antiquity, came the errour first of all. Raleigh's History of the World, b. i.

CORRUPTIBILITY. n. f. [from corruptible.] Possibility to be corrupted.

CORRUPTIBLE. adj. [from corrupt.]

1. Susceptible of destruction by natural decay, or without violence.

Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live, were it not that they are joined with his body, which is incorruptible, and that his is in ours as a cause of immortality. Hooker.

It is a devouring corruption of the essential mixture, which consisting chiefly of an oily moisture, is corruptible through dissipation. Harvey on Consumptions.

The several parts of which the world consists, being in their nature corruptible, it is more than probable, that, in an infinite duration, this frame of things would long since have been dissolved. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Susceptible of corruption; possible to be tainted or vitiated.

CORRUPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from corruptible.] Susceptibility of corruption.

CORRUPTIBLY. adv. [from corruptible.] In such a manner as to be corrupted, or vitiated.

It is too late; the life of all his blood
Is touch'd corruptibly. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CORRUPTION. n. f. [corruptio, Lat.]

1. The principle by which bodies tend to the separation of their parts.

2. Wickedness; perversion of principles, loss of integrity.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, which makes us averse to them, are so abstracted from ideas of sense, that they seldom get an opportunity for descriptions and images. Addison's Essay on the Georgics.

Amidst corruption, luxury and rage,
Still leave some ancient virtues to our age. Pope.

3. Putrescence.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,
Careful this fatal errour to prevent,
And keep the waters from corruption free,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea. Blackmore.

4. Matter or pus in a sore.

5. The means by which any thing is vitiated; depravation.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shak. Hen. VIII.

The region hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages, received new and differing names. Raleigh's History.

All those four kinds of corruption are very common in their language; for which reasons the Greek tongue is become much altered. Brerewood on Languages.

6. [In law.] An infection growing to a man attainted of felony or treason, and to his issue: for as he loseth all to the prince, or other lord of the fee, so his issue cannot be heir to him, or to any other ancestor, of whom they might have claimed by him, and if he were noble, or a gentleman, he and his children are made ignoble and ungentle, in respect of the father. Cowel.

CORRUPTIVE. adj. [from corrupt.] Having the quality of tainting or vitiating.

COUNTY. n. ſ. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Lat.]

1. A ſhire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the better government thereof, and the more eaſy adminiſtration of juſtice, ſo that there is no part of the kingdom, but what lieth within ſome county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a ſheriff, who, among other duties belonging to his office, puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of theſe counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaſter, Cheſter, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a juriſdiction of ſo high a nature, that whereas all pleas, touching the life and the maiming of a man, called pleas of the crown, and ordinarily held in the king's name, and which cannot paſs in the name of any other; the chief governors of theſe, by ſpecial charter from the king, ſent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching juſtice as abſolutely as the prince himſelf in other counties, only acknowledging him their ſuperior and ſovereign. But this power has, by a ſtatute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. Beſides the above counties of both ſorts, there are likewiſe counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to beſtow extraordinary liberties. Of theſe London one, York another, the city of Cheſter a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to theſe may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingſton upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordweſt, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another ſignification, uſed for the county court which the ſheriff keeps every month within his charge, either by himſelf or his deputy. Of theſe counties, one with another, there are reckoned thirty-ſeven in England, beſides twelve in Wales. Cowel.

Diſcharge your powers unto their ſeveral counties,
As we will ours. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ii.

He caught his death the laſt county ſeſſions, where he would go to ſee juſtice done to a poor widow-woman and her fatherleſs children. Addiſon's Spectator, N°. 517.

That was when
Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton.

Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed. Dryden.

Difficult, perplexing.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,
And had read every text and gloss over;
Whate'er the crabbed'st author hath,
He understood b' implicit faith. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius,
Are against gods, you know, and teach us,
The god makes not the poet. Prior.

CRO'CODILE. n. f. [from κροκη, saffron, and δειλος, fearing.]

An amphibious voracious animal, in shape resembling a lizard, and found in Egypt and the Indies. It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty, be pierced, except under the belly, where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with several rows of teeth, sharp and separated, which enter one another. Though its four legs are very short, it runs with great swiftness; but does not easily turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to its death; but this is not probable. Some are fifteen or sixteen cubits long. Its sight is very piercing upon the land, but in the water it sees but dimly, and it is said to spend the four winter months under water. When its bowels are taken out, or it is wounded, it smells very agreeably. Crocodiles lay their eggs, resembling goose-eggs, sometimes amounting to sixty, on the sand near the waterside, covering them with the sand, that the heat of the sun may contribute to hatch them. The Ichneumon, or Ichnan rat, which is as large as a tame cat, is said to break the crocodile's eggs whenever it finds them; and also, that it gets into the very belly of this creature, while it is asleep with its throat open, gnaws its entrails, and kills it. Calmet.

Gloster's show
Beguiles him; as the mournful crocodile,
With sorrow, snares relenting passengers. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
Crocodiles were thought to be peculiar unto the Nile. Brer.
Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep. Dryden.
Entreating crocodiles, whose tears are death,
Syrens, that murder with enchanting breath. Granville.

Crocodile is also a little animal, otherwise called sphinx, very much like the lizard, or small crocodile. It lives by land and water, has four short small legs, a very sharp muzzle, and a short small tail. It is pretty enough to look at, being covered all over with little scales of the colour of silver, intermixt with yellow and of a good colour upon the back. It always remains little, and is found in Egypt near the Red Sea, in Lybia, and at the Indies. Trevoux.

CROCODILISE. adj [crocodilus, Lat.] Like a crocodile. Dict.

The best place to plant the Spring crocus is close to a wall, or on the edge of boarded borders round a garden, mingling the colour of those of a sort on together. The seed must be kept until the husk is full grown, and a light rich ground should be chosen for them. They must not be placed too thick, they may be increased also by offsets. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Fair handed Spring unbosoms every grace,
Throws out the snow-drop and the crocus first. Thomson.

CROFT. n. f. [croyt, Saxon.] A little enclosure belonging to a house, that is used for corn or pasture.

And if it might, and yet it may again. Shakeſpeare.

8. Voice, utterance; manner of vocal expreſſion.
Sounds alſo, beſides the diſtinct cries of birds and beaſts, are modified by diverſity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune. Locke.
9. Importunate call
Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them. Jer. vii. 15.
10. Yelping of dogs.

He ſcorns the dog, reſolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He ſtrait reforms his wonted care. Waller

11. Yell, inarticulate noiſe
There ſhall be the noiſe of a cry from the fiſhgate, and an howling from the ſecond, and a great craſhing from the hills. Zeph. i. 10.
12. A pack of dogs.

About her middle round,
A cry of hell-hounds never ceaſing bark'd. Milt. Par. Loſt

You common cry of curs, whoſe breath I hate
As reek o' th' rotten fens; whoſe loves I prize
As the dead carcaſſes of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

CRY'AL. n. ſ. The heron. Ainſworth.
CRY'ER. See CRIER
CRY'ER. n. ſ. A kind of hawk called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very ſwift. Ainſworth.
CRY[illegible]AL } adj. [κρυπτὸς.] Hidden, ſecret, occult, myſ-
CRYPTICK } terious; unknown, not divulged.
The ſtudents of nature, conſcious of her more cryptick ways of working, reſolve many ſtrange effects into the near efficiency of ſecond cauſes. Glanvil's Apology.
Speakers, whoſe chief buſineſs is to amuſe or delight, do not confine themſelves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.

CRY'PTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical] Occultly; ſecretly: perhaps in the following example, the author might have written critically.
We take the word acid in a familiar ſenſe, without cryptically diſtinguiſhing it from thoſe ſapors that are acid to it. Boyle.

CRYPTO'GRAPHY n. ſ. [κρύπτω and γράφω.]
1. The act of writing ſecret characters.
2. Secret characters; ciphers.

CRYPTO'LOGY. n. ſ. [κρύπτω and λόγος.] Enigmatical language.

CRY'STAL. n. ſ. [κρύσταλλος.]
1. Cryſtals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourleſs bodies, of regularly angular figures, compoſed of ſimple, not filamentous plates, not flexile or elaſtick, giving fire with ſteel, not fermenting with acid menſtrum, and calcining in a ſtrong fire. There are many various ſpecies of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Foſſils.
Iſland cryſtal bears a red heat without loſing its tranſparency, and in a very intenſe heat calcines without fuſion: ſteeped a day or two in water, it loſes its natural poliſh: rubbed on cloth, it attracts ſtraws, like amber Chambers.
Iſland cryſtal is a genuine ſpar, of an extremely pure clear, and fine texture, ſeldom either blemiſhed with flaws or ſpots, or ſtained with any other colour. It is always an oblique parallelopiped of ſix planes, and found from a quarter of an inch to three inches in diameter. It is moderately heavy, but very ſoft, and is eaſily ſcratched with a pin It very freely calcines into a pure, but opaque white. It is found in the iſland of Iceland, and in many parts of Germany and France. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; ſo that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one, of the ſame colour and thickneſs, and running parallel to one another at a ſmall diſtance. Hill.
Water, as it ſeems, turneth into cryſtal; as is ſeen in divers caves, where the cryſtal hangs in ſtillicidiis. Bacon's Phyſ. Rem.
If cryſtal be a ſtone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral ſpirit. Brown.
Cryſtal is certainly known, and diſtinguiſhed by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as alſo of its hardneſs, which are ever the ſame. Woodward's Nath. Foſſ.
3. Cryſtal is alſo uſed for a factitious body caſt in the glaſs-houſes, called alſo cryſtal glaſs, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glaſs, though it comes far ſhort of the whiteneſs and vivacity of the natural cryſtal. Chambers.
4. Cryſtals [in chymiſtry] expreſs ſalts or other matters ſhot or congealed in manner of cryſtal. Chambers.
If the menſtruum be overcharged, within a ſhort time the metals will ſhoot into certain cryſtals. Bacon.

CRY'STAL. adj.
1. Conſiſting of cryſtal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of Gods,
Thy cryſtal window ope, look out. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

2. Bright, clear; tranſparent, lucid, pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on moſſy beds
By cryſtal ſtreams, that murmur through the meads Dryden.

CRY'STALLINE. adj. [cryſtallinus, Latin.]
1. Conſiſting of cryſtal.

Mount eagle to my palace cryſtalline. Shakeſp. Cymbeline

We provided ourſelves with ſome ſmall receivers, blown of cryſtalline glaſs. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. Bright, clear; pellucid; tranſparent.
The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; beſides the pleaſure of the eye, when water is cryſtalline. It is effected by caſting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may ſtrain through them. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 7.

He on the wings of cherub rode ſublime
On the cryſtalline ſky, in ſaphir thron'd
Illuſtrious far and wide. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. vi.

CRY'STALLINE Humour. n. ſ. The ſecond humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, oppoſite to the papilla, nearer to the forepart than the backpart of the globe. It is the leaſt of the humours, but much more ſolid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both ſides, reſembles two unequal ſegments of ſpheres, of which the moſt convex is on its backſide, which makes a ſmall cavity in the glaſſy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.
The parts of the eye are made convex, and eſpecially the cryſtalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both ſides. Ray on the Creation.

CRYSTALLIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from cryſtalline.] Congelation into cryſtals.
Such a combination of ſaline particles as reſembles the form of a cryſtal, variouſly modified, according to the nature and texture of the ſalts. The method is by diſſolving any ſaline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, 'till a film appear at the top, and then let it ſtand to ſhoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its tenacity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid in which such particles flow, is fated enough or evaporated, so that the same particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet, when are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes, so that one might as easily divest them of their saltness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals, and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each crystal, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodward's Natural History, p. 1.

To CRY'STALLIZE v. a. [from crystal] To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallising the solution, obtain a good deal of blue. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

To CRY'STALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal; concrete, or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will likewise crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. s. [of uncertain etymology]

1. The young of a beast, generally of a bear or fox.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear Shakespeare.
His right, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakespeare's King Lear.
In the eagle's destroying one fox's cub, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange, Fable 72.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost,
One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wit thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or wit, not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakespeare.
O most comical sight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr Sn pwel's shop last [illegible]

To CUB. v. n [from the noun.] To bring forth, used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt

Cub'd in a cabbin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown George with loufy swabbers fed,
Dead wine, that stinks of the Borracho, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy mapple cup. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

CUBA'TION n. s. [cubatio, Lat.] The act of lying down. Dict.

CUBATURE. n. s [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. s. [from κύβος, a die]

1. [In geometry] A regular solid body, consisting of six square equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore all equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick] See CUBICK Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common center, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew's Cosmolog. b. i. c. 2. s. 6.

CUBE Root } n. s. The origin of a cubick number; or a
CU'BICK Root } number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CU'BEB. n. s A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish-brown colour on the surface, and composed of a corrugated or wrinkled external bark, covering a single and thin friable shell or capsule, containing a single seed of a roundish figure, blackish on the surface, and white within. It has an aromatick, but not very strong smell, and a hot and pungent to the taste, but less so than pepper. Cubebs are brought into Europe from the island of Java, but the plant, which produces them, is wholly unknown to us. They are warm and carminative, and the Indians steep them in wine, and esteem them provocatives to venery. Hill.

Aromaticks, as cubeb, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more airy spirits Floyer on the Humours

CU'BICAL. } adj. [from cube.]
CU'BICK. }

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax-candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated. Holder's Elem. Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen, and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 12.

CU'BICALNESS. n. s [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical

C[illegible] adj. [cubiculum, Latin] Fitted for the posture [illegible]

[illegible] degrees, changed their cubiculary beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 6.

CU'BIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube

CU'BIT n. s. [from cubitus, Latin] A measure in use among the ancients, which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure, and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard and a quarter of the stature, and makes a cubit, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Hakewill on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height
Milton's Paradise Lost, b.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits, the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbuthnot on Measures.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight,
Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CU'BITAL. adj [cubitus, Latin] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called giants, the towers of that city being so high, that, unto men below, they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v.

CU'CKINGSTOOL. n. s. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowel.

These mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras, p. ii. cant 2.

CU'CKOLD. n. s. [cocu, Fr. from cornutus.] One that is married to an adulteress, one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world, why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't. Shakespeare's Othello.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now,
And many a man there is, even at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in's absence. Shakesp.
For though the law makes void th' adulterer's deed
Of lands, to her the cuckold may succeed. Dryden's Juvenal

Ever since the reign of king Charles I. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift

To CU'CKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife, to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's bodily

If thou canst cuckold him, thou do'st thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. [illegible]

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor trust in streets with amazonian pace,
For that is to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryd. Juv.

CU'CKOLDLY adj. [from cuckold] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor, mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor, they say the jealous knave hath masses of money Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Wind.

CU'CKOLDMAKER. n. s [cuckold and make] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away Dryden's Spanish Friar.

CU'CKOLDOM. n. s. [from cuckold]

1. The act of adultery

She

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conſuming the cuckow ag ainſt me Dryden's Spaniſh Fryar.

2 I he ſtate of a cuckold.

It is a true ſaying, that the laſt man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himſelf. Arbuthn. Hiſt. of J. Bull

CUCKOO. n. ſ. [cucu, Welſh, coccu, Lat. kuckuck, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the Spring, and is ſaid to ſuck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place; from which practice, it was uſual to alarm a huſband at the approach of an adulterer by calling cuckow, which, by miſtake, was at length applied to the huſband. This bird is remarkable for the loſt note of its ſong, from which his name is ſuppoſed to have been formed.

Lapwing, like a cuckow by a nightingale, alone with the ſame ſong Sidney.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To cloſe it ſo as to ſhut out the light, or conceal the object

I muſt draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in ſuſpence, 'till materials are prepared Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the laſt: the curtain will ſoon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wiſh you a long good night. Pope.

3. To open it ſo as to diſcern the object

Had I forgot thee? Oh, come in, Ægeon,
Soft, by and by; let me the curtains draw.
Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now? Shakeſ.

So ſoon as the all-cheering ſun
Should in the fartheſt Eaſt begin to draw
The ſhady curtain from Aurora's bed. Shakeſ. Rom. and Jul.

Peace, the lovers are aſleep

They,

They, fweet turtles! folded lie
In the laft knot that love could tie.
Let them fleep, let them fleep on,
'Till this ftormy night be gone;
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtain will be drawn,
And they waken with that light,
Whofe day fhall never fleep in night. Crafhaw.

CYPRESS-TREE. [cypreſſus, Latin.]

[illegible] are likewiſe ſquamoſe, grow at remote diſtances from the fruit on the ſame tree. The fruit is of a ſpherical form, and is compoſed of many woody tubercles, in which are contained hard angular ſeeds. Miller.

The cypreſs is a tall ſtrait tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no uſe: its leaves are bitter, and the very ſmell and ſhade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made uſe of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies. The wood of the cypreſs-tree is always green, very heavy, of a good ſmell, and never either rots or is worm eaten. It is diſtinguiſhed into male and female: the branches of the male are, as it were, horizontal, and thoſe of the female are upright, which is therefore generally uſed for paliſades of gardens, and to make pyramids. The fruit is round, of an olive colour, and as large as nuts when they are ripe, and it grows in ſeparate places. The Latins call it cenus, becauſe of its figure. This fruit is compoſed of a kind of ſcales, in the clefts of which are hidden little ſeeds, flat and angular. This tree is common on mount Libanus. Calmet

In ivory coffers I have ſtuft my crowns;
In cypreſs cheſts my arras counterpane,

DAM n. ſ. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the ſea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Thoſe banks and dams, that like a ſkreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

Not with ſo fierce a rage the foaming flood
Roars, when he bids his rapid courſe withſtood;
Bears down the dams with unreſiſted ſway,
And ſweeps the cattle and the cots away Dryden's Æneis

Let looſe the reins to all your watry ſtore,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryden.

The inſide of the dam muſt be very ſmooth and ſlo[illegible], and if it is made very ſloping on each ſide, it is the better Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [bemman, popebemman, Saxon; dammen, Dut.]

1. To confine, or ſhut up water by moles or dams.

To DEAL. v. n.

1. To traffick; to transact business; to trade.

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter, and by the mediation of a third, than by a man himself. Bacon.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels. Decay of Piety.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick. South.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. Bacon, Essay 55

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.

I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true. Tillotson's Sermons.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shakesp. R. III.

5 To DEAL by. To treat well or ill.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright. Locke.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in, to practise.

Suiters are so disdained with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. Bacon, Essay 59.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves in it. Atterbury's Sermons.

Among all sets of authors, there are none who draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters. Addison's Freeholder, N°. 40.

True logick is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute and wrangling, to which the former ages had debased and confined it. Watts's Logick.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them. Spenser's Ireland.

Who then shall guide
His people? Who defend? Will they not deal
Worse with his followers, than with him they dealt? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that. South's Sermons.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations. Tillotson.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryd. Fab. Preface.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles. Pope.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who had been thus dealt with by their country. Swift.

8. To DEAL with. To contend with.

If she hated me, I should know what passion to deal with. Sidney, b. 2.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they stand in fear. Hayward.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleas'd to see
You're not so perfect, but can fail like me:
I have no God to deal with. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

To DEALBATE. v. a. [dealbo, Lat.] To whiten, to bleach

DEALBA'TION. n. s. [dealbatio, Lat.] The act of bleaching or whitening, rendering things white, which were not so before, a word which is now almost grown into disuse.

Where fraud is permitted and connived at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. Gulliver's Travels.

3. A person who deals the cards.

DE'ALING. n. s. [from deal.]

1. Practice, action.

What these are!
Whose own hard dealings teach them to suspect
The thoughts of others. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven. Hooker, b. ii.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Intercourse.

It were to be wished, that men would promote it to the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie more immediately within their influence. Addis.

3. Measure of treatment; rules by which one treats another.

God's gracious dealings with men, are the aids and auxiliaries necessary to us in the pursuit of piety. Hammond's Fundam.

4. Traffick; business.

The doctor must needs die rich; he had great dealings in his way for many years. Swift's Bickerstaff detected.

DEAMBULA'TION. n. s. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DEA'MBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Latin.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. s. [decanus, Latin; doyen, French.]

From the Greek word δεκα; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbeys, transformed from abbot or prior, and convent to dean and chapter) so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his Congé d'elire to the chapter, the chapter then chusing, the king yielding his royal assent, and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to install them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patents, without either election or confirmation. This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowel.

The dean and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use in the church: they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for his government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

DE'ANERY. n. s. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.

When he could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal, he made him his successor in that near attendance upon the king. Clarendon.

2. The revenue of a dean.

Put both deans in one, or, if that's too much trouble,
Instead of the deans, make the deanry double. Swift.

3. The house of a dean.

Take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

DE'AN-SHIP. n. s. [from dean.] The office and rank of a dean.

DEAR. adj. [deop, Saxon.]

To DENIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Latin.] To blacken, to make black.

By ſuffering ſome impreſſion from fire, bodies are caſually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own ſmoke.

Hartſhorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat, yet camphire would not at all loſe its whiteneſs. Boyle.

DENI'GRATION.

DENIGRA'TION. n. f. [denigratio, Latin.] A blackening, or making black.

These are the advement and artificial ways of denigration, answerably wereto may be the natural progress. Brown.

In several instances of denigration the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts. Boyle.

DENIZA'TION. n. f. [from denizen.] The act of infranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens appears by the charters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them. Davies on Ireland.

DE'NIZEN. } n. s. [from denaſdeyn, a man of the city, or di-
DE'NISON } nesyad, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one enfranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Davies's Preface.

Thus th' Almighty spake; ye gods,
Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants will barely, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to seed as a free denizen of the world. Grew's Cosm. b.

He summons straight his denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the sails repair. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

To DE'NIZEN v. a. [from the noun.] To infranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all;
Mingled thus, their issue incestuous,
Should is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous. Donne.

To DENOMINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

Their commendable purpose being not of every one understood, they have been in latter ages construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorified creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places. Hooker, b. v.

Procrastination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious, to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our will? Hammond's Fundamentals.

DENOMINA'TION. n. f. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians? Spenser's State of Ireland.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad, but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryden's Defence of Dramatick Poesy.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the Heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations, as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like. South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DENOMINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That which gives a name, that which confers a distinct appellation.

2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year. Cocker's Arithmetick.

DENOMINA'TOR. n. f. [from denominate.] The giver of a name, the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DENOMINA'TOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in $\frac{6}{8}$, 8 the denominator shews you, that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 6 shews, that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Denominator of any proportion, is the quotient arising from division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 30 ÷ 5 = 6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio. Harris.

DENOTA'TION. n. f. [denotatio, Latin.] The act of denoting.

To DENO'TE. v. a. [denoto, Latin.] To mark, to be a sign of, to betoken; to shew by signs; as, a quick pulse denotes a

They impose their wild conjectures for laws upon others; and denounce war against all that receive them not. Dec. of Piety.

2. To threaten by some outward sign or expression.

He ended frowning, and his look denounc'd
Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
To less than gods. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 106.

The sea grew white; the rising waves from far,
Like heralds, first denounce the watry war. Dryden.

3. To give information against.

Archdeacons ought to propose parts of the New Testament to be learned by heart by inferior clergymen, and denounce such as are negligent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DENOU'NCEMENT. n. f. [from denounce.] The act of proclaiming any menace; the proclamation of intended evil; denunciation.

False is the reply of Cain upon the denouncement of his curse; My iniquity is greater than can be forgiven. Brown's Vul. Err.

DENOU'NCER. n. f. [from denounce.] One that declares some menace.

Here comes the sad denouncer of my fate,
To toll the mournful knell of separation. Dryden.

DENSE. adj. [densus, Latin.] Close, compact; approaching to solidity; having small interstices between the constituent particles.

The cause of cold is the density of the body; for all dense bodies are colder than most other bodies, as metals, stone, glass, and they are longer in heating than softer bodies. Bacon.

In the air the higher you go, the less it is compressed, and consequently the less dense it is; and so the upper part is exceedingly thinner than the lower part which we breathe. Locke.

To DE'NSHIRE v. a. A barbarous term of husbandry.

Burning of land, or burn baking, is commonly called denshiring, that is, Decombustioning or Denseburning, because most used or first invented here. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DE'NSITY. n. f. [densitas, Latin.] Closeness; compactness; close adhesion, or near approach of parts.

Whilst the density of metals, gold, if foliated, is transparent, and all metals become transparent, if dissolved in menstruums or vitrified, the opacity of white metals ariseth not from their density alone. Newton's Opticks.

The air within the vessels being of a less density, the outward air would press their sides together, and, being of a greater density, would expand them so as to endanger the life of the animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DENTAL. adj. [dentalis, Latin.]

1. Belonging or relating to the teeth.

2. [In grammar.] Pronounced principally by the agency of the teeth.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which gutturals. Bacon's Natural History, No. 198.

The semi consonants are easy, therefore let them be next; first the labio-dentals, as also the lingua-dentals. Holder's Elem.

DENTICULATED. adj. [denticulatus, Latin.] Set with small

[dens and fricare, Latin.] A powder made to scour the teeth.

Is this grey powder a good dentifrice? Ben. Johns. Catil.

The shells of all sorts of shell-fish, being burnt, obtain a caustick nature, most of them, so ordered and powdered, make excellent dentifrices. Grew's Museum.

DENTITION. n. f. [dentio, Latin.]

1. The act of breeding the teeth.

2. The time at which children's teeth are bred.

To DENUDATE. v. a. [denudo, Latin.] To divest; to strip; to lay naked.

The he has denudated himself of all incumbrances, he is unqualified. Decay of Piety.

DENUDATION. n. f. [from denudate.] The act of stripping, or making naked.

To DENUDE. v. a. [denudo, Lat.] To strip, to make naked; to divest.

Not a treaty can be obtained, unless we would denude ourself of all force to defend us. Clarendon, b. vi.

If in Summer-time you denude a vine-branch of its leaves, the grapes will never come to maturity. Ray on the Creation.

The eye, with the skin of the eye-lid, is denuded, to shew the muscle. Sharp's Surgery.

DENUNCIA'TION. n. f. [denunciatio, Latin.] The act of denouncing; the proclamation of a threat; a publick menace.

In a denunciation or prediction of a war, the war is not confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

Christ tells the Jews, that, if they believe not, they shall die in their sins did they never read those denunciations? Ward.

Midst of these denunciations, and notwithstanding the warning before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve.

DENUNCIA'TOR. n. f. [from denuncio, Latin.]

1. He that proclaims any threat.
2. He that lays an information against another.

The denunciator does not make himself a party in judgment, as the accuser does. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! Shakespeare's King Lear.

DEROGATION. [illegible]

1. The act of abrogating and making void a former law or [illegible]

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon's Henry VII.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law. South's S.

2. A disparaging; lessening or taking away the worth of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after reluctate to maintain. Hooker, Preface.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no disprayse. Spenser on Ireland.

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon, Essay 21.

I say

I lay not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

I believe there are none of these patriots who will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from the intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison's Freeholder, N° 39.

DEROGATIVE. adj [derogativus, Latin.] Derogating; lessening the value of.

That spirits are corporeal seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets and charms, as we have declared before. Brown's Vulgar Err.

2. Defiance.

The life, thou gav'ſt me firſt, was loſt and done;
'Till with thy warlike ſword, deſpite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'ſt new date. Shak. H. VI.

My life thou ſhalt command, but not my ſhame;
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Deſpite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark'd honour's uſe thou ſhalt not have. Shak. Rich. II

Know I will ſerve the rain in thy deſpite Dryd. Fab.

I have not quitted yet a victor's right,
I'll make you happy in your own deſpite. Dryd. Aurengzebe.

Say, would the tender creature, in deſpite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore's Creation.

Thou, with rebel inſolence, dar'ſt diſdain
To own and to protect that hoary ruin,
And in deſpite, ev'n of thy father's juſtice,
To ſtir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe's Amb. S. Moth.

3. Act of malice, act of oppoſition.

His puniſhment, eternal miſery,
Would be all his ſolace and revenge,
As a deſpite done againſt the moſt High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milt. Par. Loſt

To DESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.] To vex, to affront, to give uneaſineſs to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night, ſetting the town on fire, to deſpite Bacchus. Raleigh's Hiſtory

DESPITEFUL. adj. [deſpite and full.] Malicious; full of ſpleen, full of hate; malignant, miſchievous: uſed both of perſons and things

His taken labours bid him me forgive;
I, his deſpiteful Juno, ſent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth Shakeſ.

Preſerve us from the hands of our deſpiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Mean while the heinous and deſpiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradiſe, was known
In heaven. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x. l. 1.

He waits with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or ſend thee back
Deſpoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliſs. Milt. Par. Loſt

He, pale as death, deſpoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal preſt,
Awaits this day of all his honours gain'd
Deſpoils him, if thy ſuccour opportune
Defends not the ſad hour Philips

DESPOLIATION. n. f. [from deſpolio, Latin.] The act of deſpoiling or ſtripping.

To DESPOND. v. a [deſpondeo, Latin.]

1. To deſpair; to loſe hope, to become hopeleſs or deſperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling, and not to deſpond for any miſcarriages or diſappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Eſtrange, Fab. 110.

There is no ſurer remedy for ſuperſtitious and deſponding weakneſs, than firſt to govern ourſelves by the beſt improvement of that reaſon which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all chearfully, for the reſt, to the good pleaſure of heaven with truſt and reſignation. L'Eſtrange.

Beſides, to change their paſture 'tis in vain,
Or truſt to phyſick, phyſick is their bane
The learned leaches in deſpair depart,
And ſhake their heads, deſponding of their art. Dryd. Virgil

Others depreſs their own minds, deſpond at the firſt difficulty, and conclude that making any progreſs in knowledge, further than for ſome ordinary buſineſs, is above their reach. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To loſe hope of the divine mercy.

He [illegible] what ſtock he has to truſt to of ſuch a virtue, or ſuch a vice: he is well apprized that the repreſentation of ſome of theſe things may convince the underſtanding, ſome may terrify the conſcience, ſome may allure the ſlothful, and ſome encourage the deſponding mind. Watts's Improvement.

DESPONDENCY. n. f. [from deſpondent.] Deſpair; hopeleſneſs; deſperation.

DESPONDENT. adj. [deſpondens, Latin.] Deſpairing; hopeleſs; without hope.

Congregated thruſhes, linnets, ſit
On the dead tree, a dull deſpondent flock. Thomſon's Autumn.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldeſt atheiſts, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be ſurpriſed with ſolitude or ſickneſs, are the moſt ſuſpicious, timorous, and deſpondent wretches in the world. Bentley's Sermons.

DESPOTICK. } mited in authority, arbitrary; unaccountable.

God's univerſal law
Gave to the man deſpotick power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile ſhe or lowre. Milton's Agoniſtes.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reaſon conveyed its ſuggeſtions with clearneſs, and enjoined them with power: it had the paſſions in perfect ſubjection; though its command over them was but perſuaſive and political, yet it had the force of coactive and deſpotical. South's Sermons.

We may ſee in a neighbouring government the ill conſequences of having a deſpotick prince, in a ſtate that is moſt of it compoſed of rocks and mountains; for notwithſtanding there is vaſt extent of lands, and many of them better than thoſe of the Swiſs and Griſons, the common people among the latter are in a much better ſituation. Addiſon on Italy.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madneſs of the people, who, ſtirred up with the harangues of their orators, were now wholly bent upon ſingle and deſpotick ſlavery Swift.

DESPOTICALNESS. n. f. [from deſpotical.] Abſolute authority.

Birds are deſtinated to fly among the branches of trees and buſhes. Ray on the Creation.

DESTINATION. n. f [from deſtinate.] The purpoſe for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate deſign.

The paſſages through which ſpirits are conveyed to the members, being almoſt infinite, and each of them drawn through ſo many meanders, wherein other ſpirits are a journeying, it is wonderful that they ſhould perform their regular deſtinations without loſing their way. Glanv. Scepſ.

There is a great variety of apprehenſions and fancies of men, in the deſtination and application of things to ſeveral ends and uſes. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To DESTINE. v. a [deſtine, Latin.]

1. To doom; to appoint unalterably to any ſtate or condition.

Wherefore ceaſe we then?
Say they who counſel war we are decreed,
Reſerv'd, and deſtin'd to eternal woe:
Whatever doing, what can we ſuffer more? Milt. Par. Loſt.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Drench'd in his gore, the deſtin'd ſacrifice. Dryden's Æneis.

The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r,
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour Prior

DE'STINY. n. s. [destinée, French.]
1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate of living beings.
Thou art neither like thy sire or dam;
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shakes. Henry VI.
2. Fate; invincible necessity.
He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fail of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is ty'd to Jove's eternal seat? Fairy Queen, b. i.
How can hearts, not free, be try'd whether they serve
Willing or no, who will but what they must
By destiny, and can no other chuse? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
To know, as well as pow'r to act her will. Denham.
Chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first whate'er shall be. Dryden's Fab.
3. Doom; condition in future time.
At the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' th' morning thither he
Will come to know his destiny. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DE'STITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Latin.]
1. Forsaken; abandoned.
To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure. Hooker, b. v. f 1.
He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. Psal. cii. 17.
2. In want of.
Living turfs upon his body lay;
This done, securely take the destin'd way
To find the regions destitute of day Dryden's Æn. b. vi
Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

DESTITU'TION. n. s. [from destitute.] Want; the state in which something is wanted.
That destitution in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, 'till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker, b. v.
The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in destitution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To DESTRO'Y. v. a. [destruo, Latin; détruire, French.]

3. To kill.
A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead. Deutr. ii. 21.
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakes. Macbeth.
The wise providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.
4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.
Do we not see that slothful, intemperate and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.
There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTRO'YER. n. s. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer
In all the translations it is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it; it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh's History of the World.
For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men. Milt. P. Lost.
Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives Pope.

DESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Latin.] Liable to destruction.

Helmont wittily calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDA'TION. n. s. [desudatio, Latin.] A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DESU'ETUDE. n. s. [desuetudo, Latin.] Cessation to be accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.
By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.
We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant. Government of the Tongue.

DESU'LTORY. } adj. [desultorius, Lat.] Roving from thing
DESULTO'RIOUS. } to thing; unsettled; immethodical; unconstant
'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a lewd course of life, nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one, by [illegible] L'Estrange.
Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultorious fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game. Norris.
Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art. Felton on the Classicks.

To DESU'ME. v. a. [desumo, Latin.] To take from any thing, to borrow
This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter. Hale.
They have left us relations suitable to those of Ælian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations. Brown's Vul. Err.
Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse, though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries. Hale's Law of England.

To

To DETACH. v. a [detacher, French.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.

The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it detaches from the uppermost stratum. Woodward's Natural History, p. 111.

The several parts of it are detached one from the other, and when join again one cannot tell how. Pope.

2. To send out part of a greater body of men on an expedition.

If ten men are in war with forty, and the latter detach only an equal number to the engagement, what benefit do they receive from their superiority? Addison on the State of the War.

DETACHMENT. n. s. [from detach.] A body of troops sent out from the main army.

The Czar dispatched instructions to send out detachments of his cavalry, to prevent the king of Sweden's joining his army. Tatler, N°. 55.

Behoves materials, which are brute and blind,
Did not this work require a knowing mind?
Who for the task should fit detachments chuse
From all the atoms. Blackmore's Creation.

To DETAIL. v. a [detailler, French.] To relate particularly; to particularise; to display minutely and distinctly.

They will perceive the ground of the mistakes of these philosophers, and be able to answer their arguments, without my being obliged to detail them. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

DETAIL. n. s. [detail, French.] A minute and particular account.

I chuse, rather than trouble the reader with a detail here, to defer them to their proper place. Woodward's Natural History.

I was unable to treat this part of my subject more in detail, without becoming dry and tedious. Pope.

To DETAIN. v. a [detineo, Latin.]

1. To keep that which belongs to another.

Detain not the wages of the hireling, for every degree of detention of it, beyond the time, is injustice and uncharitableness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. To withold; to keep back.

These doings fling him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme,
The day reflection, and the midnight dream. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To curse, to execrate, to doom to destruction.

Yet not for thy advice, or threats, I fly
Those wicked tents devoted; lest the wrath
Impendent, raging into sudden flame,
Distinguish not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. 890.

To destruction sacred, and devote,
He with his whole posterity must die. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Goddess of maids, and conscious of our hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When, hissing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden's Fables.

Let her, like me, of every joy forlorn,
Devote the hour when such a wretch was born
Like me to deserts and to darkness run. Rowe's Jane Shore.

DEVO'TEDNESS. n. f. [from devote.] The state of being devoted or dedicated.

Whatever may fall from my pen to her disadvantage, relates to her but as she was, or may again be, an obstacle to your devotedness to seraphick love. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

The owning of our obligation unto virtue, may be stiled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God, our liege Lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. ii. c. 5.

DEVOTEE. n. f. [devot, French.] One erroneously or superstitiously religious; a bigot.

DEVOTION, [devotion, French, devotio, Latin.]

1. The state of being consecrated or dedicated.

2. Piety; acts of religion.

Mean time her warlike brother on the seas
His waving streamers to the winds displays,
And vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryd.

3. An act of external worship.

Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion. Hooker.

For as I passed by and beheld your devotion, I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God. Acts xvii. 23.

In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotions he to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.

An aged holy man,
That day and night said his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply. Fairfax, b.
Your devotion has its opportunity, we must pray always, but chiefly at certain times. Sprat's Sermons.

5. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependance upon God.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. 514.

From the full choir, when loud Hosanna's rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid' that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold relicques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n. Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of public or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises. Law on Christ's Perfection.

6. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.

Whither away so fast?
— No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakesp. Richard III.

7. Strong affection, ardent love, such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.

Be opposite, all planets of good luck,
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter. Shak. R. III.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king, and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education. Clar.

8. Disposal; power, state of dependance on any one.

Arundel-castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion. Clarendon, b. vii.

DEVOTIONAL. adj. [from devotion.] Pertaining to devotion; annexed to worship; religious.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in holy offices, to be performed with me. King Charles.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate, by a few demure looks, with some devotional postures and grimaces. South's Sermons.

DEVO'TIONALIST. n. f. [from devotion.] A man zealous without knowledge; superstitiously devout.

To DEVOU'R. v. a. [devoro, Latin.]

1. To eat up ravenously, as a wild beast or animal of prey.

We will say some evil beast hath devoured him. Gen. xxxvii.

We've willing dames enough: there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

So looks the pent up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws. Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.

A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth. Joel ii. 3.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd;
It was the waste of war. Dryden's Æn. b. v.

Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection. Addison's Spectator, N°. 493.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He seemed in swiftness to devour the way. Shakespeare.

Such a pleasure as grows from upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured. South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour. Dryden.

DEVOU'RER. n. f. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours, he that preys.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers:
Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou then,
From these devourers to be banished? Shak. Tit. Andronicus.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place. Decay of Piety.

Store the pond with carp and tench, which do the best together of any fish, all other fish being devourers of their spawn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

1. Pious, religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour. Rogers, Sermon 13.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode. Dryd. Fables.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark
The ancient sire descends, with all his train
Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
Grateful to heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 863.

DEVO'UTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces
Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and, saint-like,
Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly. Sh. H. VIII.

One of the wise men of the society of Solomon's house, having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face. Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day,
She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray;
Who being here filled with grace, yet strove to be
Both where more grace and more capacity
At once is given. Donne.

Thank,

Think, O my ſoul, devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,
Thou ſaw'ſt the wide extended deep
In all its horrors riſe! Addiſon's Spectator, N°. 400.

To ſecond cauſes we ſeem to truſt, without expreſſing, ſo devoutly as we ought to do, our dependence on the firſt Agent. Atterb.

DEUSE n. ſ. [more properly than deuce, Junius, from Deuſus, the name of a certain ſpecies of evil ſpirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the pretty'ſt prologue, as he wrote it,
Well, the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it. Congreve.

DEUTERO'GAMY. n. ſ. [δευτερος and γαμος.] A ſecond marriage. Ainſ.

DEUTERONO'MY. n. ſ. [δευτερος and νομος.] The ſecond book of the law, being the book of Moſes.

DEUTEROSCOPY n. ſ. [δευτερος and σκοπεω.] The ſecond intention, the meaning beyond the literal ſenſe.

Not attaining the deuteroſcopy, or ſecond intention of the words, they are fain to omit their conſequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DEW. n. ſ. [deap, Saxon, dauw, Dutch.] The moiſture upon the ground.

Fogs, particularly thoſe which we frequently obſerve after ſun-ſetting, even in our hotteſt months, are nothing but a vapour, conſiſting of water, and of ſuch mineral matter as it meets with in its paſſage and could well bring up along with it; which vapour was ſent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the ſun then being above the horizon, taking off at the ſurface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmoſphere, it was not diſcernible, as now it is; becauſe the ſun being now gone off, the vapour ſtagnates at and near the earth, and ſaturates the air 'till it is ſo thick as to be eaſily viſible therein: and when at length the heat there is ſomewhat further ſpent, which uſually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cheriſhes, cools and refreſhes, after the ſcorching heat of the foregoing day. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of ſleep,
But with his timorous dreams was ſtill awak'd. Shak. R. II.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

She looks as clear
As morning roſes newly waſh'd with dew. Shakeſpeare.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moiſt vapours condenſed. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 82.

Now ſliding ſtreams the thirſty plants renew,

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew, to moiſten; to bedew.

A tricking ſtream of balm moſt ſovereign,
And dainty dear, which on the ground ſhall fall,
And overſtrowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dewed been with timely rain. Fairy Queen, b.

Be we the medicine of the ſickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge,
Each drop of us.
——Or ſo much as it needs
To dew the ſovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakeſ.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears. Shakeſ. H. VI.

He ceas'd; diſcerning Adam with ſuch joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words, which theſe he breath'd
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. xi. l. 373.

In ſable garments, dew'd with guſhing tears. Dryd. Fables.

2. It is not uſed properly of an action of terrour.

In Gaſcon blood again
He dews his reeking ſword, and ſtrows the ground
With headleſs ranks. Dryden.

DEW'BERRY. n. ſ. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they ſtand here among the more delicate fruits, muſt be underſtood to mean raſberries, which are alſo of the bramble kind. Hanmer.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries. Shakeſpeare.

DEWBESPRENT. part. [dew and beſprent.] Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their ſupper on the ſavoury herb
Of knot-graſs dewbeſprent, and were in fold,
I ſat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-ſuckle. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the ſparkling of dew.

He, now to prove his late renewed might,
High-brandiſhing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his creſted ſcalp ſo ſore did ſmite,
That to the ſcull a yawning wound it made. Fairy Queen.

DEWDROP. n. ſ. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which ſparkles at ſun

I muſt go ſeek ſome dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowſlip's ear Shakeſpeare

Innumerable as the ſtars of night,
Or ſtars of morning, dewdrops, which the ſun
Impearls on every leaf, and every flow'r. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Reſt, ſweet as dewdrops on their flow'ry lawns,
When the ſky opens, and the morning dawns! Tickell

DEWLAP. n. ſ. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The fleſh that hangs down from the throat of oxen

Large rowles of fat about his ſhoulders flang,
And from his neck the double dewlap hang. Adiſ. Ov. Met.

2. It is uſed in Shakeſpeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And ſometimes lurk I in a goſſip's bowl,
In very likeneſs of a roaſted crab,
And when ſhe drinks againſt her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale. Shakeſpeare.

DEWLAPT adj. [from dewlap.] Furniſhed with dewlaps

Who would believe, that there were mountaineers
Dewlapt like bulls, whoſe throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of fleſh. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DEWWORM. n. ſ. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew-worm, which ſome call the lob-worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton's Angler.

DEWY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Reſembling dew, partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy miſt
Went up, and watered all the ground, and each
Plant of the field. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. vii. l. 331.

Where two adverſe winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid ſky,
Engage with horrid ſhock, the ruffled brine
Roars ſtormy. Philips.

2. Moiſt with dew; roſeal.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone, 'gan herſelf to rear,
With roſy cheeks, for ſhame as bluſhing red. Fairy Queen.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth ſing,
And the waters murmuring,
With ſuch conſort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd ſleep. Milton.

His dewy locks diſtill'd
Ambroſia. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v. l. 56.

His own Praeneſte ſends a choſen band,
With thoſe who plough Saturnia's Gabine land;
Beſides the ſuccour which cold Anxur yields,
The rocks of Hernicus and dewy fields. Dryden's Æn. b. viii.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this ſiniſter
Bounds in my ſire's. Shakeſpeare's Troilus and Creſſida.

DEXTERITY n. ſ. [dexteritas, Latin.]

1. Readineſs of limbs; activity; readineſs to attain ſkill, ſkill; ea

2. Readineſs of contrivance; quickneſs of expedient; ſkill of management.

His wiſdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himſelf from dangers, when they preſſed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off Bacon's Henry VII.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South's Sermons.

The ſame Proteſtants may, by their dexterity, make themſelves the national religion, and diſpoſe the church-revenues among their paſtors. Swift.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]

1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready; as, a dexterous workman.

2. Expert in management; ſubtle; full of expedients.

They confine themſelves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner, with which they content themſelves.

DEXTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.] Expertly; ſkilfully; artfully.

The magiſtrate ſometimes cannot do his own office dexterouſly, but by acting the miniſter. South's Sermons.

But then my ſtudy was to cog the dice,
And dexterouſly to throw the lucky rice. Dryden

DEXTRAL.

D I A

As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by meer irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

DEXTRA'LITY. n. f. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

DIABE'TES, n. f. [διαβήτης.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectick sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions. Derham's Physico-Theology.

DIABO'LICAL } adj. [from diabolus, Latin.] Devilish; par-
DIABO'LICK. } taking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious, pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milt. Par. Lost.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature, and upon the common well-being of mankind? L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Ray on the Creation.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage, and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery. Atterbury's Sermons.

DIACODIUM n. f. [Latin.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACOUSTICS. n. f. [διακούω.] The doctrine of sounds.

DIADEM. n. f. [diadema, Latin.]

1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of Eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound. Fairy Queen.

A ist the cobler's temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head, the crown.

A crown,
Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton's Par. Lost.

Why should he ravish then that diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time
Most shortly plant on his. Denham's Sophy.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And [illegible]
Fled like a mist before this radiant day. Roscommon.

DIADE'MED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,
Her priestless muse forbids the good to dye,
And opes the temple of eternity. Pope.

DI'ADROM n. f. [διάδρομος.] The time in which any motion is performed, the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of one inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum, whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute. Locke.

DIÆ'RESIS. n. f. [διαίρεσις.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as a"er.

DIAGNO'STICK n. f. [διαγνωστικὸν.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some undisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house.—let us hear your diagnosticks. Collier on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks. Harvey on Consumptions.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monstrosity of the badger is ill contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 5.

This, and all like sorts of stone that are composed of gra-, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata. Woodward on Fossils.

DIAGONAL n. f. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIAGONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished, according unto their activity and predominant locomotion, on the either side. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv.

DI'AGRAM, n. f. [διάγραμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley's Sermons.

DIAGRY'DIATES, n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder. Floyer.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shews the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour. Shakesp. Henry IV.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone. Glanv. Scepf. c. 11.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

He tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of one of these needles, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addison's Spectator, N°. 241.

DIALECT. n. f. [διάλεκτος.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Teutonick.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person, upon whom it was conferred, to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South's Sermons.

DIALE'CTICAL. adj. [from dialectick.] Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties that the schoolmen too often employ about physiological mysteries, are wont much more to declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALE'CTICK. n. f. [διαλεκτική.] Logick; the art of reasoning.

DI'ALLING. n. f. [from dial.] The scientick science; the knowledge of shadow; the act of constructing dials on which the shadow may shew the hour.

DI'ALIST. n. f. [from dial.] A constructer of dials.

Scientick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Moxon.

DI'ALOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DI'ALOGUE. n. f. [διάλογος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckow? Shakespeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise;
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise. Dryden.

To DI'ALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to confer.

[illegible] Shakespeare.

DIALY'SIS. n. f. [διάλυσις.] The figure in rhetorick by which syllables or words are divided.

DIAMETER. n. f. [διὰ and μέτρον.] The line, which passing through the center of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy and Alfraganus, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Raleigh's History of the World.

The bay of Naples is the moſt d[illegible] ſaw; it lies in almoſt a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

DIAMETRAL adj. [from diameter] Deſcribing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIAMETRALLY. adv. [from diametral] According to the direction of a diameter.

Chriſtian piety is, beyond all other [illegible], diametrally oppoſed to profaneneſs and impiety of a[illegible].

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Deſcribing a diameter.
2. Obſerving the direction of a diameter.

The ſin of calumny is ſet in a moſt diametrical oppoſition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourſelves. Government of the Tongue, ſect. v

DIAMETRICALLY adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical manner.

He perſuaded the king to conſent to what was diametrically againſt his conſcience and his honour, and, in truth, againſt his ſecurity. Clarendon, b. v

When it is thus intercepted in its paſſage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the ſtratum diametrically, glides along the lower ſurface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the ſaid denſe ſtratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodward.

DIAMOND. n. ſ. [diamant, French; adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the moſt valuable and hardeſt of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the pureſt water; and is eminently diſtinguiſhed from all other ſubſtances by its vivid ſplendour, and the brightneſs of its reflexions. It is extremely various in ſhape and ſize, being found in the greateſt quantity very ſmall, and the larger ones extremely ſeldom met with. The largeſt ever known is that in the poſſeſſion of the great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and ſeventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth ſeven hundred and ſeventy-nine thouſand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the ſtrongeſt fires, except the concentrated ſolar rays, without hurt, and even that infinitely fierceſt of all fires does it no injury, unleſs directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glaſs-houſe fire for many days, and, if taken carefully out, and ſuffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before, but if taken haſtily out, it will ſometimes crack, and even ſplit into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the Eaſt Indies and the Braſils, and though they are uſually found clear and colourleſs, yet they are ſometimes ſlightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of ſome metaline particles. Hill on Foſſils.

This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;
But keep it till you woo another wife. Shakeſp. Cymbeline

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promiſed. Shakeſpeare.

I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou haſt the right arched bent of the brow. Shak. Mer. Wives of Windſ.

The diamond is preferable and vaſtly ſuperior to all others in luſtre and beauty, as alſo in hardneſs, which renders it more durable and laſting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other ſtone. Woodward's Meth. Foſſ.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the ſtar that uſhers in the morn. Blackm. Creation

The lively diamond drinks thy pureſt rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomſon's Summer, l. 140.

DIAPASE. n. ſ. [διὰ παζῶν.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapaſon. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the baſe,
Proportion'd equally by ſeven and nine;
Nine was the circle ſet in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapaſe. Fairy Queen.

[illegible]
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapaſe of pleaſures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenſer.

DIAPA'SON. n. ſ. [διὰ παζῶν]

Diapaſon denotes a chord which includes all tones; the ſame with that we call an eighth, or an octave, for there are but ſeven tones or notes, and then the eighth is again with the firſt.

It diſcovereth the true concordence of ſounds into diapaſon, which is the return of the ſame ſound. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

Harſh din
Broke the fair muſick that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whoſe love their motion ſway'd
In perfect diapaſon, whilſt they ſtood
In firſt obedience, and their ſtate of good. Milton.

Many a ſweet riſe, many as ſweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapaſon ſwallows all. Craſhaw

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This univerſal frame began:
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compaſs of the notes it ran,
The diapaſon cloſing full in man. Dryden.

DIAPER. n. ſ. [diapre, French, of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen.

Nor any damſel, which her vaunteth moſt

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh's History of the World.

Thus born alike from virtue first began
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd not title from descent of blood,
But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes, under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Oh the strange difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due;
My fool usurps my body. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practised right, and men accustomed only to spoil. Hayward.

4. Dispute, debate, quarrel, controversy.

What was the difference?
It was a contention in public. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

He is weary of his life that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after day-light. Sandys.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution, under a good administration, does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison's Freeholder, N°. 31.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such a difference among them, about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillotson.

6. Point in question, ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the difference,
That holds this present question in the court? Shakespeare.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference, and commonly, by answering men with a subtilty, branch the matter. Bacon's Essays.

8. Evidences of distinction; different marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Davies.

To DIFFERENCE v. a. [from the noun] To cause a difference, to make one thing not the same as another.

Most are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulate motions, whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs, which are commonly observed, and are differenced by other concurrent causes. Holder's Elements of Speech.

a level and well cultivated region from a delicate wilderness. Ray on the Creation.

We see nothing that differences the courage of Mnestheus from that of Sergesthus. Pope's Essay on Homer.

DIFFERENT adj. [from differ]

1. Distinct, not the same.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and, in the absence of those, which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. Of many contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,
And other climes, where different food and soil
Portend distempers. Philips.

3. Unlike, dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair, because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dufresn.

DIFFERENTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of arithmetical, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions, about the invention of which there has been a contest between Leibnitz and Sir Isaac Newton. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DIFFERENTLY adv. [from different] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it discovered by a person of an ordinary genius.

DIFFERINGLY, adv. [from differing] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may reflect the light so differingly, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFICIL adj. [difficilis, Latin]

1. Difficult; hard, not easy, not obvious. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficil apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glanv. Scepsis, c. 4.

Latin was not more difficil,
Than to a blockhead 'tis to whistle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficil in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit towards that see, that he had touched none of those deniers which was heaved by popes in England. Bac.

DIFFICILNESS n. s. [from difficil] Difficulty to be persuaded; incompliance, impracticability.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or difficilness, or the like; but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief. Bacon's Essays.

DIFFICULT adj. [difficilis, Latin]

With hope and fear
The woman did the new solution hear.
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubts the gods.

DI'FFIDENCE. n. f. [from diffido.] Diſtruſt; want of confidence; timidity.

No man almoſt thought himſelf ſecure, and men durſt ſcarce converſe or talk one with another, but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought ſcandal
To Iſrael, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propenſe enough before
To waver. Milton's Agoniſtes.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true ſenſe, be only on probable proofs, our aſſent can reach no higher than an aſſurance or diffidence, ariſing from the more or leſs apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be ſilent always, when you doubt your ſenſe,
And ſpeak, though ſure, with ſeeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatſoever atheiſts think on, or whatſoever they look on, all do adminiſter ſome reaſons for ſuſpicion and diffidence, leſt poſſibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley's Serm.

DI'FFIDENT. adj. [from diffido.] Not confident, not certain, doubtful.

I am not ſo confident of my own ſufficiency as not willingly to admit the counſel of others; but yet I am not ſo diffident of myſelf, as brutiſhly to ſubmit to any man's dictates. K. Charles.

Be not diffident
Of wiſdom; ſhe deſerts thee not, if thou
Diſmiſs not her, when moſt thou need'ſt her nigh. Milton.

I was really ſo diffident of it, as to ſet it aſide by me theſe two years, juſt as you now ſee it. Pope.

Pliny ſpeaks of the Seres, the ſame people with the Chineſe, as being very ſhy and diffident in their manner of dealing.

Diſtreſs makes the humble heart diffident. Clariſſa.

3. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digester. Temple.

DIGE'STIBLE. adj. [from digest.] That which is capable of being digested or concocted in the stomach

Those medicines that purge by stool enter not into the mesentery veins; but are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 43.

DIGE'STION n. s. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation, heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion. Arbuthnot on Aliments

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Leslian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion. Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South's Sermons.

2. The preparation of matter by a chymical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 327.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there. Blackmore

I dressed it with digestives Wiseman of Abscesses.

DI'GGER n. s. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To DIGHT v. a. [dihtan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.] To dress, to deck; to bedeck, to embellish, to adorn.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which maketh him invisible to sight. Hubberd's Tale.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pace,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Il Penser.

Just so the prond in gilding lass
Array'd and dighted Hudibras. Hudibras, p. 1. cant. 3.

DI[illegible]
1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quicksilver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.
3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten

Not only the number seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by most, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DI'GITATED. adj [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into divisions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves

For animals multifidous, or such as are digitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous, that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulgar Errours

DIGLADIATION n. s. [digladiatio, Latin.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity. Glanv. Scepsis

DI'GNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity, it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICA'TION. n. s. [from dignify.]

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person. Walton's Angler.

To DI'GNIFY v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer, to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.
2. To honour, to adorn; to give lustre.

Such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not 'till now to dignify the times,
Since Cæsar's fortunes! Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But your worth will dignify our feast. Ben. Johnson's Epigr.

No turbots dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

DI'GNITARY n. s. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity; to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit. Swift

DI'GNITY n. s. [dignitas, Latin.]

Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakesp. Henry VI.
For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them,
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed.

5. Maxims, general principles; κοιναι ἐννοιαι.

The sciences conclud.ng from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare and peremptory asseverations. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 7.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNOTION n. f. [dignotio, Latin.] Distinction; marking thing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 21.

To DIGRE'SS. v. n. [digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander, to expatiate.

It seemeth, to digress no farther, that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track, to transgress, to deviate.

I am come to keep my word,
Though some part am forced to digress,
Which more before I will to excuse
As you shall well be satisfied Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
My noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

DIGRE'SSION n. f. [digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney, b. i.

He, she knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Here some digression I must make, t'accuse
Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse. Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryd. Dufresn.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal, but near the equinoctial intersections, it is right and greater; near the solstices, more oblique and lesser. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 4.

DIJUDICA'TION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judicial distinction.

DIKE, n. f. [dic, Saxon, dyk, Fr.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers flout the neighbour ground. Dryd. Virg. Geo.

2. The state of being extended, the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts, which maketh them more lively and [illegible]

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton's Opt. Experim.

To DILATE. v. a. [dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend, to spread out, to enlarge.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye sorted with a prince's peer,
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear. Spenser.
Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erst, dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead
Chiefly I sought; without thee, can despise Milt. Par. Lost.
Through all the air his founding strings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.
Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere,
Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Prior.
I mark the various fury of the winds,
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds
They now dilate, and now contract their force,
Various their speed, but ceaseless is their course. Pope.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton's Opt.

2. To relate at large, to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theam
For to dilate at large; but urged sore,
With piercing words, and piteous implore,
Him hastly to arise. Fairy Queen, b. stan. 37.
Observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakespeare's Othello.

The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon Ayliffe's Parergon.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud
Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryd. Æn.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lovers blood. Dryd. Fables.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire,
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope's Epistles.

Now on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a grassy vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius sits to dip poetick souls. Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

So fishes rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
The moisture dry'd, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet

And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring dew
Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milton.

3. To be engaged in any affair

The goddeſs, with a diſcontented air,
Seems to reject him, though ſhe grants his pray'r. Pope.

DiscontE'NTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from diſcontented.] Uneaſineſs; want of eaſe, diſſatisfaction.

A beautiful buſt of Alexander the Great, caſts up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or diſcontentedneſs in his looks. Addiſon's Travels.

DiscontE'NTMENT. n. ſ. [from diſcontent.] The ſtate of being diſcontented; uneaſineſs.

Theſe are the voices that fill them with general diſcontentment, as though the boſom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noiſome than any dungeon. Hooker.

Certainly the politick and artificial nouriſhing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the beſt antidotes againſt the poiſon of diſcontentments. Bacon, Eſſay 16.

DiscontI'NUANCE. n. ſ. [from diſcontinue.]

1. Want of coheſion of parts; want of union of one part with another, diſruption.

The ſchiſmaticks of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themſelves into a ſmall thread, becauſe they will not diſcontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they caſt themſelves into round drops, which is the figure that ſaveth the body moſt from diſcontinuance. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

2. Ceſſation; intermiſſion.

Let us conſider, whether our approaches to him are ſweet and refreſhing, and if we are uneaſy under any long diſcontinuance of our converſation with him. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off, as diſcontinuance of poſſeſſion, or diſcontinuance of proceſs. The effect of diſcontinuance of poſſeſſion is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatſoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority, but muſt ſeek to recover poſſeſſion by law. The effect of diſcontinuance of plea is, that the inſtance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the ſuit afreſh. Cowel.

Discontinua'TION. n. ſ. [from diſcontinue.] Diſruption of continuity; breach of union of parts, diſruption; ſeparation.

Upon any diſcontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles or by ſhaking the glaſs, the whole mercury falls. Newt. Opt.

To DiscontI'NUE. v. a. [diſcontinuer, French.]

1. To loſe the coheſion of parts; to ſuffer ſeparation or diſruption of ſubſtance.

All bodies, ductile and tenſile, as metals that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread, have in them the appetite of not diſcontinuing ſtrong, which maketh them follow the force that poleth them out, and yet ſo as not to diſcontinue or forſake their own body. Bac.

2. To loſe an eſtabliſhed or preſcriptive cuſtom.

Thyſelf ſhalt diſcontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cauſe thee to ſerve thine enemies. Jer. xvii. 4.

To

To Discontinue. v. n. To leave off; to ceafe any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lies I'll tell
That men fhall fwear I've difcontinued fchool
Above a twelvemonth. Shakefpeare.

Examine thy cuftoms of diet, fleep, exercife, apparel, and the like, and try, in any thou fhalt judge hurtful, to difcontinue it by little and little; but fo, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2 To break off, to intercept.

There is but one property, in all letters, of aptnefs to be contained in fyllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one ftop or figure to another, that they modify and differ inflate the voice, without appearing to difcontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Discontinuity. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Difunity of parts; want of cohefion.

That this difcontinuity of parts is the principal caufe of the opacity of bodies, will appear by conficering that opaque fubftances become tranfparent by filling their pores with any fubftance of equal, or almoft equal denfity with their parts. Newton Opt.

Disconvenience. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; difagreement; oppofition of nature.

Fear arifeth many times out of natural antipathies of nature, but in thefe difconveniences of nature deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Anfwer to Hobbs.

Discord. n. f. [difcorde, Fr. difcordia, Lat.]

1 Disagreement, oppofition, mutual anger, reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a fcourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!
And I, for winking at your difcords too,
Have loft a brace of kinfmen. Shakefp. Rom. and Jul.
Like but degree'd, untune that ftring,
And hark what difcord follows, each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakefp. Troil. and Creff.
He is a falfe witnefs that fpeaketh lies, and that foweth difcord among brethren. Prov. vi. 19.

2. Difference, or contrariety of qualities.

Difcord, like that of mufic's various parts,
Difcord that makes the harmony of hearts,
Difcord that only true difpute fhall bring,
Who beft fhall love the duke and ferve the king. Dryd. Ep.
All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canft not fee;
All difcord, harmony not underftood,
All partial evil, univerfal good. Pope's Eflay on Man.

3 [In mufic.] Sounds not of themfelves pleafing, but neceffary to be mixed with others.

It is found alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect moft; this is moft manifeft in mufic, and concords and difcords in mufic: for all founds, whether they be fharp or flat, if they be fweet, have a roundnefs and equality; and if they be harfh, are unequal: for a difcord itfelf is but a harfhnefs of divers founds meeting. Bacon's Nat Hift. Part I. p. 400.

It is the lark that fings fo out of tune,
Straining harfh difcords and unpleafing fharps. Shakefp.

To DISHEA'RTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.]
1. To discourage; to deject; to terrify, to depress.
To dishearten with fearful sentences, as tho salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not in our understanding so consonant with christian charity Hooker, b. v. s. 22.
Be not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks,
That wont to be more cheerful and serene. Milt. Par. Lost.
Yet neither thus disheartened nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd I waited. Milton.
It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends. Bp. Hacket's Pref. to Def. Rem. Id.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it. Tillotson, Serm. 1.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends, or even the fears of our disheartened enemies. Atterbury.

DISHE'RISON. n. f. [dis and herison.] The act of debarring from inheritance.

To DISHE'RIT v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from hereditary succession, to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited. Spencer's Past

How they were rank'd shall rest untold by me,
With nameless nymphs that liv'd in ev'ry tree,
Nor how the Dryads and the woodland train,
Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain. Dryden's Fab.

To DISHE'VEL. v. a [decheveler, French.] To spread the hair disorderly, to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent and hair dishevelled,
Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan. Sp. Fa. Qu.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I? —Heav'n be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Shakespeare.

DISHO'NOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach, disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him in that despicable condition the glorious title of his friend. Boyle's Seraphick Love

Take him for your husband and your lord,
'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryden's Fables.

2. Reproach uttered, censure, report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm-doing. Shakespeare's Henry V. II.

To DISHO'NOUR. v. a. [dis and honour]

1. To disgrace, to bring shame upon, to blast with infamy.

Make known,
It is no vicious blot, murther, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour; S
This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune. Shakesp. Cor

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judged wise of all; but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all. Ecclus. xxvi. 26.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden's Dufres.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

If I, celestial sire! in ought
Have serv'd thy will, or gratify'd thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands,
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands. Dryd. Iliad.

DISHO'NOURABLE. adj [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful, reproachful, ignominious.

He did dishonourable deed
Those articles which did our state decrease. Dan. Civ. War.

2. In a state of neglect or distress.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty. Eccles. x. 31.

DISHO'NOURER. n. f. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods
It would be to ordain their [illegible]
Dishonourer of Dagon. Milton's Agon. l. 857.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHO'RN. v. a. [dis and horn.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakesp. M. W. of Wind.

DISHU'MOUR. n. f [dis and humour] Peevishness, ill humour, uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishonour, are also criminal. Spectator, N°. 424.

DISIMPRO'VEMENT. n. f. [dis and improvement] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth. Norris.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations for thirty years past have been real disimprovements. Swift.

To DISINCA'RCERATE. v. a. [dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty, to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm, or subtilizing air, to melt and open the surface of the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies. Harvey on the Plague.

DISINCLINA'TION. n. f. [from disincline.] Want of affection; slight, dislike; ill will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible. Arb. and Pope.

To DISINCLINE v. a. [dis and incline.] To produce dislike to; to make disaffected, to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they began every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to oblige. Clarendon.

DISINGENU'ITY. n. f. [from disingenuous] Meanness of artifice, unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work. Clarendon.

DISINGE'NUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenuous.] Unfair; meanly artful, viciously subtle, sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman, crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age
Of idleness, who all our pow'rs engage
In the same studies, the same course to hold,
Not think our reason for new arts too old. Denham.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning their church, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions. Stillingfleet

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and misbecoming any one who pretends to be a rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason and the conviction of clear arguments. Locke.

DISINGE'NUOUSLY. adv. [from disingenuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

DISINGE'NUOUSNESS. n. f. [from disingenuous] Mean subtilty; unfairness, low craft.

I might press them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance. Government of the Tongue, f. 3

Dis-

DISINHE'RISON n. f. [dis and inherit] The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession, the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent and even oppose such disinherison. Clarendon.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and even consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherisons or great injuries to the lawful children. Taylor.

To DISINHE'RIT v. a. [dis and inherit] To cut off from an hereditary right, to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then put with us to disinherit
The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars, and thou fair moon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos that reigns here
In double night of darkness, and of slander. Milton.

Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony,
That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave ye none;
So disinherited, how would ye bless
Me, now your curse! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 971.

Of how fatal a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication. South's Sermons.

To DISINTE'R v. a. [from dis and inter] To unbury; to take out of the grave.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wise, the good, or the great man, very often he hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred. Addis. Sp.

DISINTERESSED. n. f. [dis and interesse, French. It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly] Without regard to private advantage; not biassed by particular views, impartial.

Not that true virtue's parts are useless here,
Then general, too, disinterested, and clear. Dryden.

DISINTERESTMENT. n. f. [from disinterested] Freedom from regard to private advantage; disinterest, disinterestedness. This word like charges in the same sentence, is merely gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom with known honesty, and laid them down with entire disinterestment. Prior's Postscript.

DISINTEREST. n. s. [desintérêt, French; dis and interest]

1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity, that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome. Glanville.

2. [from the adjective] Regard to private advantage.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest] Superior to regard of private interest; not influenced by private profit.

My lord, as disinterested as you appear to the world, I am assured, that no man is more in the power of prevailing [illegible] Swift.

Without any concern in an affair, without fear or hope.

DISINTERESTEDLY. adv. [from disinterested] In a disinterested manner.

DISINTERESTEDNESS n. f. [from disinterested] Contempt of private interest, neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner. Brown.

To DISINVITE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation. Dict.

To DISJOIN v. a. [desjoindre, French; dis and join.] To separate, to part from each other, to disunite, to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise
Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin. Milton's P. Lost.

Disjoins us, and I then too late renounce
Deity for thee, when fate will not permit. Milton. P. Lost.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd
Together we had liv'd ev'n not in death disjoin'd. Dryd.

Never let us lay down our arms against France till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

1. To carve a fowl.
2. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such [illegible]

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy,
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, words her words disjointed, &c.

To DISJOINT v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DISJOINT participle. [from the verb.] Separated, divided.

Young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
Thinks, by our late dear brother's death,
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shakesp. Hamlet.

DISJUDICA'TION n. s. [disjudicatio, Latin.] Judgment; determination; perhaps only mistaken for disjudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudications we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

DISJU'NCT. adj. [disjunctus, Latin.] Disjoined, separate.

DISJU'NCTION n. f. [from disjunctus, Latin] Disunion; separation, parting.

You may
Enjoy your mistress now, from whom, you see,
There's no disjunction to be made, but by
Your ruin. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical, or spiritual part, justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

DISJU'NCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Latin.]

1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. i. c. 2.

2. That which marks separation or opposition, as I love him, or fear him.

3. [In logick.] A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles; as, It is either day or night. The weather is either rainy or rainy. Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true; but the two first are not strictly true, because twilight is a medium between day and night, and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining. Watts's Logick.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive; as, The earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts's Logick.

DISJU'NCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united. Causes of the Decay of Piety.

DISK n. f. [discus, Latin.]

1. The face of the sun, or any other planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newt.

Mercury's disk
Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,
Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson's Summer.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the antient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. i. c. 5.

In areas vary'd with mosaic art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope's Od.

DISKI'NDNESS n. f. [dis and kindness.] Want of kindness; want of affection, want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity, detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

DISLI'KE. n. f. [from the verb]

1. Disinclination, absence of affection, the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compel
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakesp.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual diſlike to ſin. Hammond's Pract. Catechiſm.

Sorrow would have been as ſilent as thoughts, as ſevere as philoſophy. It would have reſted in inward ſenſes, tacit diſlikes. South's Sermons.

Our likings or diſlikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy than upon reaſon. L'Eſtrange.

The jealous man is not angry if you diſlike another, but if you find thoſe faults which are in his own character, you diſcover not only your diſlike of another, but of himſelf. Addiſ

2. Diſcord; diſſention, diſagreement. This ſenſe is not now in uſe.

This ſaid Aceſtes, and a murmur roſe
That ſhew'd diſlike among the chriſtian peers. Fairfax.

What moſt he ſhould diſlike, ſeems pleaſant to him,
What like, offenſive. Shakeſpeare's King Lear

Yet diſlike, and ſo undo
The players, and diſgrace the poet too. Denh. Prol. Sophy.

Whoſoever diſlikes the digreſſions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLI'KEFUL. adj. [diſlike and full.] Diſaffected, malign.

I think it beſt, by an union of manners, and conformity of [illegible], to bring them to be one people, and to put away the diſlikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenſer's Ireland.

To DISLI'KEN. v. a. [dis and like.] To make unlike.

Muffle your face,
Diſguiſe you; and, as you can, diſliken
The truth of your own ſeeming. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

DISLI'KENESS. n. ſ. [dis and likeneſs.] Diſſimilitude; not reſemblance, unlikeneſs.

That which is not deſigned to repreſent any thing but itſelf, can never be capable of a wrong repreſentation, nor miſlead us from the true apprehenſion of any thing by its diſlikeneſs to it; and ſuch, excepting thoſe of ſubſtances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLI'KER. n. ſ. [from diſlike.] A diſapprover; one that is not pleaſed.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleaſing a majority, ſo great that the diſlikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift's Contin.

To DISLI'MB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To diſlimate; to tear limb from limb. Dict.

To DISLI'MN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to ſtrike out of a picture.

That which is now a horſe, even with a thought
The rack diſlimns, and makes it indiſtinct
As water is in water. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleop.

To DI'SLOCATE. v. a. [dis and locus, Latin.]

1. To put out of the proper place.

The ſtrata ſeemed to have been diſlocated, borne from their original ſite, and diſtanced by ſome external power. Woodw.

DI'SMALNESS. n. ſ. [from diſmal.] Horror; ſorrow.

To DISMA'NTLE v. a. [dis and mantle.]

1. To throw off a dreſs; to ſtrip.

He that makes his prince deſpiſed and undervalued, and beats him out of his ſubjects hearts, may eaſily ſtrip him of his other garriſons, having already diſpoſſeſſed him of his ſtrongeſt, by diſmantling him of his honour, and ſeiſing his reputation. South's Sermons.

2. To looſe; to unfold, to throw open.

This is moſt ſtrange!
That ſhe, who ev'n but now was your beſt object,
Deareſt and beſt, ſhould in this trice of time
Commit a thing ſo monſtrous, to diſmantle
So many folds of favour. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

3. To ſtrip a town of its outworks.

It is not ſufficient to poſſeſs our own fort, without the diſmantling and demoliſhing of our enemies. Hakewill on Provid.

And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shak. K. Lear.

DISOBEDIENCE. n. s. [dis and obedience.]

1. Violation of lawful commands or prohibition; breach of duty due to superiours.
'Tis offence is holy that she hath committed,
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or unduteous title Shak. Mer. W. of Windsor.
Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, sing heav'nly muse. Milton.
Murder, adultery, or disobedience to parents, have a general not an antecedently to laws. Stillingfleet.
This is not disobedience, but rebellion; 'tis disclaiming the sovereignty of Christ, and renouncing all allegiance to his authority. Rogers, Sermon 4.

2. Incompliance.
If planetary orbs the sun obey,
Why should the moon disown his severe sway;
Why in a whirling eddy of her own
Around the globe terrestrial should she run?

1. To hide under false appearance; to conceal; to pretend that not to be which really is.

Your son Lucentio
Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections. Shakespeare.

She answered, that her soul was God's; and touching her faith, as she could not change, so she would not dissemble it. Hayward.

2. To pretend that to be which is not. This is not the true signification.

In vain, on the dissembled mother's tongue,
Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung,
And real care in vain, and nature love
In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

To DISSE'MBLE. v. n. To play the hypocrite.

Ye dissembled in your hearts when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, pray for us. Jer. xlii. 20.

I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, required
I should do so in honour. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakesp. Richard III.

Thy function too will varnish o'er our arts,
And sanctify dissembling. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

DISSE'MBLER. n. f. [from dissemble.] An hypocrite, a man who conceals his true disposition.

Thou dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou. Shakesp.

The French king, in the business of peace, was the greater dissembler of the two. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such an one, whose virtue forbiddeth him to be base and a dissembler, shall evermore hang under the wheel. Raleigh.

The queen, with rage inflam'd,
Thus greets him, Thou dissembler, wouldst thou fly
Out of my arms by stealth Denham.

Men will trust no farther than they judge a person for sincerity fit to be trusted: a discovered dissembler can atchieve nothing great and considerable. South's Sermons

DISSE'MBLINGLY. adv. [from dissemble.] With dissimulation; [illegible]

They might all have been either dissemblingly spoken, or falsly reported of the equity of the barbarous king. Knolles.

It is not unneceſſary to digeſt the documents of cracking authors into ſeveral claſſes. Harris on Conſumptions.

DODDER. n. ſ. [trouteren, to ſhoot up, Dutch Skinner.

Dodder is a ſingular plant: when it firſt ſhoots from the ſeed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants, but the capillaments of which it is formed, ſoon after clinging about theſe plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itſelf along the ſtalks of the plant, entangling itſelf about them in a very complicated manner. It has no leaves, but conſiſts of ſuch capillaments or ſtalks, as are brownish with a caſt of red, which run to great lengths. They have at certain diſtances tubercles, which fix them faſt down to the plant, and by means of which they abſorb the juices deſtined for its nouriſhment. The flowers ſtand in a kind of little round cluſters on the ſtalks, are ſmall, of a whitiſh or pale reddiſh colour, of the bell faſhioned kind, and deeply divided into four or five ſegments at the edge; The flower is ſucceeded by a roundiſh fruit with three or four ridges, that give it a trigonal or tetragonal form: this has only one cavity. The ſeeds are numerous: theſe fall upon the ground, and produce young plants. Hill.

DO'DDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder, covered with ſupercreſcent plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Dodder'd with age, whoſe boughs encompaſs round
The houſhold gods, and ſhade the holy ground. Dryd. Æn.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either preſentation to the ordinary, or inſtitution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Cowel.

Never did ſteeple carry double truer;
His is the donative, and mine the cure. Cleveland.

DONE. part. paſſ. of the verb. To do.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof who ſo did eat, eftſoons did know
Both good and evil. O mournful memory!
That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. ii. ſtanz. 47.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded; when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakespeare's Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.
—Done: but my bargain shall be this,
I'll throw my mask off when I kiss. Cleveland

'Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge. L'Estrange, Fab. 133.

DO'NJON. n. s. [now corrupted to dungeon, from dominonum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong,
Which of the castle was the chief dongeon,
Wherein the knightes were in prison,
Was even joynant to the garden-wall,
There as this Emely had her playeing. Knight.

DO'NOR. n. s. [from dono, Latin.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Letters thick besiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
The promis'd dole. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. i.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated by an ill execution of them, and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote. Atterbury's Sermons.

DO'ODLE. n. s. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little, Fainaint.] A trifler; an idler.

To DOOM. v. a. [deman, Saxon.]

Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land. Dryd. Æn.
I have no will but what your eyes ordain;
Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign. Granville.

DOOM. n. s. [dom, Saxon; doem, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence, judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakesp. H. VI.
To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best Milton.
And now, without redemption, all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom severe. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 224.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of, but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or excusing him. Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windsor-castle, elves within and out
Strew good luck, Ouphes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand 'till the perpetual doom. Shakespeare.

3. Condemnation.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou do'st evil. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DRAGONSBLOOD. n. f. [dragon and blood] So called from a false opinion of the dragon's combat with the elephant.

Dragonsblood is a resin, so oddly named as to seem to have been imagined an animal production. It is moderately heavy, friable, and dusky red, but of a bright scarlet, when powdered: it has little smell, and is of a resinous and astringent taste. One sort is very compact: another sort less compact, and less pure, is called common dragonsblood. A third sort is tough and viscous, and of a blood colour, and in keeping it [illegible] like the first sort. Four vegetables afford dragonsblood: a tall tree in the Canaries: the sanguis draconis exsudates from the cracks of the bark in the great heats. Another grows to six or eight feet high in the island of Java, where the resin is extracted from the fruit, about the size of a hazelnut, by boiling. A third is a tall tree in New Spain, and a true sanguis draconis flows from the trunk. The fourth [illegible] branches yield a resinous juice, which seems to be our finest sort of dragonsblood. Hill's Materia Medica.

Take dragonsblood, beat it in a mortar, and put it in a cloth with aqua vitæ, and strain them together. Peacham.

DRA'GONSHEAD. n. f. A plant.

DREAD. adj [ɒpæd, Saxon.]

1. Terrour; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the ſentence of dread baniſhment
On yond proud man, ſhould take it off again
With words of ſooth! Shakeſpeare's Richard II.

It cannot be, but thou haſt murther'd him:
So ſhould a murtherer look, ſo dread, ſo grim.
To be expoſ'd againſt the warring winds?
To ſtand againſt the deep dread bolted thunder. Shakeſp.

Amaze
Be ſure, and terrour, ſeiz'd the rebel hoſt,
When, coming towards them, ſo dread they ſaw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd. Milt. P. Loſt.

2. Awful, venerable in the higheſt degree.

Thou, attended gloriouſly from heav'n,
Shalt in the ſky appear, and from thee ſend
The ſummoning archangels to proclaim
Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. . l. 323.

From this deſcent
Celeſtial virtues riſing, will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall. Milton.

3. This ſeems to be the meaning of that controverted phraſe dread majeſty. Some of the old acts of parliament are ſaid in the preface to be metuendiſſimi regis, our dread ſovereign's.

To DREAD. v. a. [from the noun] To fear in an exceſſive degree.

You may deſpiſe that which terrifies others, and which at all, even thoſe who moſt dread it, muſt in a little time encounter. Wake.

DREADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful] Terribly, frightfully.

Not ſharp revenge, nor hell itſelf can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuſe,
Condemns the wretch, and ſtill the charge renews. Dryden.

DRE'ADLESSNESS. n. f. [from dreadleſs.] Fearleſneſs, intrepidity, undauntedneſs.

Zelmane, to whom danger then was a cauſe of dreadleſneſs, all the compoſition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with ſwiftneſs of deſire croſſed him. Sidney DRE'ADLESS. adj. [from dread.] Fearleſs; unaffrighted, intrepid, unſhaken; undaunted, free from terrour.

Dreadleſs, ſaid he, that ſhall I ſoon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou had'ſt done great tort
Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen, b. v. cant. 5. ſtan. 27.

All night the dreadleſs angel, unpurſu'd,
Through heav'n's wide champain held his way Milton.

DREAM. n. f. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Merit Caſaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δρᾶμα τοῦ βίου, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a repreſentation of ſomething which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram.

Δαιὴ was, ὁ βίος ἐς πανηγυρις ἐμπάλιν ἔστιν,
[illegible]

1. A phantaſm of ſleep; the thoughts of a ſleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and ſleep
In the affliction of theſe terrible dreams
That ſhake us nightly. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread,
Or, ſhipwreck'd, labour to ſome diſtant ſhore. Dryden.

Glorious dreams ſtand ready to reſtore
The pleaſing ſhapes of all you ſaw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundleſs ſuſpicion.

Let him [illegible]
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry [illegible],
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, diſlike,
He may enguard his dotage, Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt [from the noun.]

1. To have the repreſentation of ſomething in ſleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilſt the outward ſenſes are ſtopped, ſo that they receive not outward objects with their uſual quickneſs, or the mind; not ſuggeſted by any external objects, or known occaſion, nor under the rule or conduct of the underſtanding. Locke.

I have long dream'd of ſuch a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do deſpiſe my dream. Shakeſ. H. IV.

I have ridiculouſly ſince
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyſelf and me:
We have been down together in my ſleep,
Unbuckling helms, fiſting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundleſs plain. Tatler, N°. 81.

2. To think; to imagine.

Theſe boys know little they are ſons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shak. Cymbeline.

He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that firſt orb more than a tranſient cruſt. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
'Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the ſnare. Dryden.

3. To think.

They dream on in a conſtant courſe of reading, but not digeſting. Locke.

I began to dream of nothing leſs than the immortality of my work. Smith.

3. To be ſluggiſh; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryd. All for Love.

To DREAM. v. a. To ſee in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolomey. Dryden.

At length in ſleep their bodies they compoſe,
And dreamt the future fight, and early roſe Dryden's Fab.

DRE'AMER. n. f. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his ſleep.

The viſion fled, and vaniſh'd from his ſight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryden.

If our dreamer pleaſes to try whether the glowing heat of a glaſs furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowſy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man, a viſionary

Sometime he angers me,
With telling of the moldwarp, and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakeſ. Henry IV.

3. A mope; a man loſt in wild imagination; a reveur.

The man of ſenſe his meat devours,
But only ſmells the peel and flow'rs;
And he muſt be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the ſtreamer p

4. A ſluggard; an idler

DRE'AMLESS. adj. [from dream.] Without dreams.

The ſavages of mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameleſs and dreamleſs. Camden's Remains.

DUN. adj. [dun, Saxon.]
1. A colour partaking of brown and black.
By mixing such powders we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opt.
2. Dark; gloomy
Come, thick night!
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold! hold. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He then survey'd
Hell, and the gulph between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of heav'n on this side,
In the dun air sublime. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 69:

To DUN v. a. [dunan, Saxon, to clamour] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity
Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly: they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day. Bacon.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South's Sermons.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudibras, p. 1. cant. 2.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve's Old Batchelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:
O! how short durance was the new made state!
How far more mighty than heaven's love, hell's hate! Dryd.

DURATION. n. s. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers's Sermons.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration, that it should have a due length in it. Addison's Spectator, N°. 267.

To DURE. v. n. [dure, Latin.] To last; to continue, to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh's History of the World.

It doth end in a dyſentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual ... piſſing, or a hot dyſury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E Has two founds; long, as feine, and short, as men. E is the moſt frequent vowel in the Engliſh language, for it not only is uſed like the reſt in the beginning, middle or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as can, cane; man, mane; gap, gape; glad, glade; brēd, brēde, chin, chine; rub, rūbe; thin, thīne; nd, nēde, tūn, tūne; plum, plūme. Yet it ſometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gōne, knowledge, edge, give. And only almoſt every word ended with e; as for can, canne, for yar, yeare; for great, greate, for need, neede; for ſack, ſacke. It is probable that this e final had at firſt a ſoft ſound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verſe required, 'till at laſt it became univerſally ſilent.

Ea has the ſound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the appoſition of e to the end of the word, as mēn, mēan, ſīl, ſēal; mēt, mēat, nīt, nēat.

EACH. pron [elc, Saxon; elk, Dutch, ilk, Scottiſh.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatneſs be,
Yet both are for each other's uſe diſpoſ'd,
His to incloſe, and your's to be incloſ'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This ſenſe is rare, except in poetry.

otion all adm r'd, and each how he
To be th' inventer miſs'd. Milton, b. vi.

Let each
His adamant ne coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm. Milton, b. vi.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible beſides. Milton's Paradiſe Reg.

Wiſe Plato ſaid, the world with men was ſtor'd,
That ſi ccour each to other might afford Denham.

To EACH the correſpondent word is other, whether it be uſed of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis ſaid they eat each other Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Let each eſteem other better than themſelves. Phil. ii. 3.

Loveſt of women! heaven is in thy ſoul;
Beauty and virtue ſhine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine! Addiſ. Cato.

EAD. [ead, ed.] in the compound, and ead in the ſimple names, denotes happineſs, or bleſſedneſs. Thus Eadward is a happy preſerver, Eadulph, happy aſſiſtance; Eadgar, happy power; Eaduin, happy conqueror; which Macarius Eupolemus, Fauſtus, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in ſome meaſure reſemble. Ead may alſo in ſome caſes be derived from the Saxon eath, which ſignifies eaſy, gentle, mild. Gib. Camden.

EA'GER. adj [eagen, Saxon, aigre, French.]

1. Struck with deſire, ardently wiſhing, keenly deſirous; vehement in deſire; hotly longing.

Of pēt'on eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger ſought. Dryden's Ovid.

Eager to read the reſt, Achates came. Dryden's Æn.

With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And eager for the journey ſoon prepar'd,
He longs the world beneath him to ſurvey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day Dryden.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his hurts,
Smother'd her words. Addiſon's Ovid's Metam. b. ii.

2. It is uſed ſometimes with of, ſometimes with in or after before the thing ſought.

3. Hot of diſpoſition; vehement, ardent, impetuous.

Apt as well to quicken the ſpirits as to allay that which is too eager Hooker, b. v. ſ. 42.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himſelf innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick, haſty, eaſily put in action.

His Numidian gen us
Is well diſpos'd to proſecute, were he prompt
And eager on it, but he muſt be ſpurr'd. Addiſon's Cato.

5. Sharp; ſower, acid.

With a ſudden vigour it doth poſſet
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholeſome blood. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

6. Keen, ſevere; biting.

The air bites ſhrewdly; it is very cold
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

The reſiſtance of bone to cold is greater than of fleſh, for that the fleſh ſhrinketh, but the bone reſiſteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 688

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Glaſs will ſometimes be ſo eager, as artiſts call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glaſs itſelf. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of deſire; with impetuoſity of inclination.

To the holy war how faſt and eagerly did men go, when the prieſt perſuaded them that whoſoever died in that expedition was a martyr? South's Sermons.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the ſeed of future actions wait.

2. Ardently, hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having ſome advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his ſoldiers fell to ſpoil,
Whilſt we by Anthony were all incloſ'd. Shak. Jul. Cæſar.

3. Keenly; ſharply.

Abundance of rain froze ſo eagerly as it fell, that it ſeemed the depth of Winter had of a ſudden been come in. Knolles.

EA'GERNESS. n. ſ. [from eager.]

1. Keenneſs of deſire, ardour of inclination.

She knew her diſtance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerneſs with her reſtraint. Shakeſpeare.

Have you not ſeen, when whiſtled from the fiſt,
Some falcon ſtoop'd at what her eye deſign'd,
And, with her eagerneſs, the quarry miſs'd. Dryden.

The eagerneſs and ſtrong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerneſs as wit and humour Addiſon's Freeholder.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerneſs of love. Addiſon's Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from thoſe pleaſures, which are purſued with eagerneſs by princes who have not the publick ſo much at heart. Addiſon.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerneſs they engage our purſuit, leave us ſtill empty and unſatisfied with their fruition. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Impetuoſity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerneſs and height of their devotion; they are ſpeechleſs for the time that it continues, and proſtrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with ſuch eagerneſs of haſte,
As fiends, let looſe, would lay all nature waſte. Dryd. Aur.

EA'GLE. n. ſ. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; eallar, Erſe.]

1. A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. But ſome think that this recovery of youth happens no otherwiſe in the eagle than in other birds, by caſting their feathers every year in the moulting ſeaſon, and having others in their room. It is alſo ſaid not to drink at all, like other birds with ſharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle ſees its young ſo well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their neſt, flutters with its wings, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it ſees them weary, or fearful, it takes and carries them upon its back. Eagles are ſaid to be extremely ſharp-ſighted, and, when they take flight, ſpring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes ſtead ly fixed upon the ſun, mounting 'till, by their diſtance, they diſappear. Calmet

D ſmay'd not thus
For captains Macbeth and Banquo?

As ſparrows eagles, or the hare the lion Shakeſp. Macbeth.
Draw forth the monſters of th' abyſs profound
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope's Eſſ. on Man.
The founders of the ancient Romans
Arts firſt flow'd where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eye.]
1. Sharp-ſighted as an eagle.
As he was rarely quick and perſpicacious, ſo was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and perfectly verſed in the humours of his ſubjects. Howel's Vocal Forreſt.
Every one is eagle-eyed to ſee
Another's faults and not deformity. Dryden's Perſ. Sat. 4.

EA'GLE-FISH. n. ſ. [eagle and fiſh] Swiftneſs like that of an eagle.
Aſcupe, with eagle-fiſh ſhe cut the ſky,
In ſtarts too ſwift for mortal eye. Pope's Corydon, b. i.

EA'GLESTONE. n. ſ. A ſtone ſaid to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nells, and aſſigned to have a partieular virtue in defending the eagle's neſt from thunder. The ſtones of this kind which are moſt valued are flat and black ſh, and ſound, if ſhaken near the ear, a leſſer ſtone ſeeming contained in the greater. Gunner
Stone contains, in a cavity within it, a ſmall looſe ſtone which rattles when it is ſhaken; and every ſtone, with a ſucceſſive motion, has obtained the name. The ſort of analogy that was ſuppoſed to be between a ſtone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers expreſs it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to think that it muſt have great virtues and effects in accelerating and retarding delivery, ſo that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion, and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. It is pretended, that the eagles ſeek for theſe ſtones to lay in their nells, and that they cannot hatch their young without. On ſuch falſe and imaginary virtues was founded all the credit which this famous foſſil poſſeſſed for many ages. Hill' Materia Medica.

EASE. n. f. [aise, French.]

1. Quiet, reſt, undiſturbed tranquillity; no laborious ſtate.

We ſhould not find her baſe ſo brave and bold
To lead it to the wars, and to the ſeas,
To make it ſuffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, reſt with eaſe. Daniel
The proud on ſkins of off rings takes his eaſe,
And mighty viſions in his ſlumber ſees
Lucan, content with praiſe, may lie at eaſe
In coſtly grotts and marble palaces Dryden's Juv. Sat 7.

Men of parts and penetration were not apt to diſpute at their eaſe, but were to act according to the reſult of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge at a ſentence in general is the buſineſs only of thoſe who are at eaſe and leiſure Locke

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral ſtate between pain and pleaſure

That which we call eaſe is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Eſtrange.

Is it a ſmall crime to wound himſelf by anguiſh of heart, to deprive himſelf of all the pleaſures, or eaſe, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Reſt after labour, intermiſſion of labour

Give yourſelves eaſe from the fatigue of waiting. Swift

4. Facility, not difficulty

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with eaſe, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foreſeen'd to view the dying ſtate,
If not, no labour can the tree conſtrain
And ſtrength of ſtubborn arms and ſteel are vain. Dryden

5. Unconſtraint; freedom from ſtiffneſs, formality, forced behaviour, or concern

True eaſe in writing comes from art, not chance;
As thoſe move eaſieſt who have learn'd to dance. Pope's Eſſ.

To EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain

Help and eaſe children the beſt you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To relieve; to aſſuage, to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore eaſe thou ſomewhat the grievous ſervitude. 2 Chron. x. 4.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief,
It ſhall be eaſed, if France can yield relief. Shakeſp. H VI.
As if with ſports my ſufferings I could eaſe. Dryden.

Though he ſpeaks of ſuch medicines as procure ſleep, and eaſe pain, he doth not determine their doſes. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Will he for ſacrifice our ſorrows eaſe?
And can our tears reverſe his firm decrees? Fa[illegible]

3. To relieve from labour.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A ſong will help the beating ſtorm to bear,
And that thou may'ſt not be too late abroad,
Sing, and I'll eaſe thy ſhoulders of thy load. Dryden's Paſt.

4. To ſet free from any thing that offends.

I will eaſe me of mine adverſaries. Iſa. i. 24.

No body feels pain that he wiſhes not to be eaſed of, with a deſire equal to that pain, and inſeparable from it Locke.

EASEFUL. adj. [eaſe and full.] Quiet, peaceable, fit for reſt

I ſpy a black, ſuſpicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious ſun,
Ere he attain his eaſeful weſtern bed. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

EASEMENT. n. f. [from eaſe.]

1. Aſſiſtance, ſupport, relief from expences

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and ſome other eaſements. Swift

2. [In law.] A ſervice that one neighbour has of another by charter or preſcription, without profit, as a way through his ground, a ſink, or ſuch like. Cowel.

EASILY. adv. [from eaſy.]

1. Without difficulty

Thoſe move ſwiftly, and at great diſtance; but they require a medium well diſpoſed, and their tranſmiſſion is eaſily ſtopped. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 647.

She aſk'd the reaſon of his woe,
She aſk'd, but with an air and mien,
That made it eaſily foreſeen
She fear'd too much to know. Prior.

3. Without pain; without diſturbance, in tranquillity.

Is it not to be deſired to all mankind to condemn their univerſal opinions and deſigns, if, inſtead of paſſing your life as well and eaſily, you reſolve to paſs it as ill and as miſerable as you can? Temple.

3. Readily, without reluctance.

I can eaſily reſign to others the praiſe of your illuſtrious family Dryden's Dedic. to State of Innocence.

Not ſoon provok'd, ſhe eaſily forgives,
And much ſhe ſuffers, as ſhe much believes. Prior.

EASINESS. n. f. [from eaſy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the eaſineſs that they are raiſ'd. Ben. Johnſ. Catil.

Eaſineſs and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to ſome power, and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be eaſy to the ſame perſon, when aſſiſted with a greater ſtrength. Tillotſon, Sermon 6.

The ſeeming eaſineſs of Pindarick verſe has made it ſpread; but it has not been conſidered. Dryden

You miſs a conqueſt more than half atchiev'd,
And for whoſe eaſineſs I almoſt griev'd. Dryden.

This plea appears under a colour of friendſhip to religion, and to invite men to it by the eaſineſs of the terms it offers.

2. Flexibility, compliance, readineſs, not oppoſition, not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like eaſineſs of condeſcending further unto them. Hooker, Pr.

Since the cuſtom of eaſineſs to alter and change laws is ſo great, no doubt but to bear a tolerable ſore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy. Hooker, b. v. ſ. 14.

Give to him, and he ſhall but laugh at your eaſineſs, ſave his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South

The ſafeſt way to ſecure honeſty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an eaſineſs to part with to others whatever they have or have not occaſion for. Locke.

3. Freedom from conſtraint, not effort; not formality

Auſtruſe and myſtick thoughts you muſt expreſs
With painful care, but ſeeming eaſineſs;
For truth ſhines brighteſt through the plaineſt dreſs. Roſc.

4. Reſt, tranquillity

I think the reaſon I have aſſigned hath a great intereſt in that reſt and eaſineſs we enjoy when aſleep. Ray on the Creation.

Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak. K. Lear

How much it is in every one's power to make reſolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try Locke.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with variety of palaces. Addison on Italy.

2. Quiet, at rest, not harrassed; not disturbed; without pain.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges and employment. Temple

Keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, a marriage where both meet unhappy. Addison's Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances, they are naturally enemies to innovations. Addison's Freeholder, N° 42.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter Addison's Cato.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable. Smalridge's Sermons.

3. Complying, unresisting; credulous.

Rated with reasons not unplausible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares Milton.

Oh such deceits he guard their easy hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious arts. Dryden's Æn.

The kindest father I have ever found him,
Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes. Addison's Cato.

4. Free from pain.

Another part, in squadrons and gross bands,
On bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
Might yield them easier habitation. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Is eath to move with plaints and shews of woe. Fairfax, b. iv.

The way was strait and eath. Fairfax.

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word

Who hath the world not try'd,
From the right way full eath may wander wide. Hubb. To

EATINGHOUSE. n. s. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dressed

An hungry traveller stept into an eatinghouse for his dinner L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. s. [efepe, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness. It nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

His tears run down his beard, like Winter drops
From eaves of reeds. Shakespeare's Tempest.

If in the beginning of Winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty Winter. Bacon, N. 811.

Usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses. Woodward.

To hear if any mean to shrink from me. Shakesp. Rich. III

EBB n. s. [ebba, ebbiob, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea.

The clear sun on his wide watery glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'rds the deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And thrive the loaden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay, waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of. Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again Raleigh's History of the World.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away Roscommon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

Near my apartment let him prisoner be,
That I his weary ebbs of life may see. Dryden's Aurengzebe

What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the few remains,
His salt poor ebbs of blood in your defence? Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back towards the sea

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity 'till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before Dryden's Æn.

2. To decline, to decay, to waste

2. To

Well, I am ſtanding water:
——I'll teach you how to flow.
——Do ſo to ebb
Hereditary ſloth inſtructs me. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.
But oh he ebb'd! the ſmiling waves decay!
For ever, lovely ſtream, for ever ſtay! Halifax.

EBEN. } n. ſ. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard, heavy, black, valu-
EBON. } able wood, which admits a fine gloſs.
EBONY }

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn, they uſe not the ſame tools they do for ſoft woods. Moxon's Mech. Exerciſes

Oft by the winds extinct the ſignal lies,
Or ſmother'd in the glimmering ſocket dies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne. Gay's Trivia.

EBRI'ETY. n. ſ. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenneſs; intoxication by ſtrong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote againſt ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

EBU'LLITION. n. ſ. [ebullio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.
2. Any inteſtine motion.
3. That ſtruggling or effervescence which ariſes from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; and hence any inteſtine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occaſioned by the ſtruggling of particles of different properties, is ſo called.

The diſſolution of gold and ſilver diſagree; ſo that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkneſs, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noiſe and emication, as alſo a craſſe and fumid exhalation, cauſed from the combat of the ſulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous ſpirits of aqua fortis. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

When aqua fortis, or ſpirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, diſſolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor ruſh towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmoſt particles and the main maſs of the metal. Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if ſal ammoniack, or any pure volatile alkali, diſſolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will enſue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ECCENTRICAL.
ECCENTRICK. } [eccentricus, Latin.]

1. Deviating from the center.
2. Not having the ſame center with another circle: ſuch circles were ſuppoſed by the Ptolemaick philoſophy

Whether his courſe he bends
Through the calm firmament, but up or down,
By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

They build, unbuild, contrive,
To ſave appearances, how gird the ſphere
With centrick, and eccentrick, ſcribbl'd o'er,
Cycle, and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the ſame way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick? Newton's Opt.

3. Not terminating in the point; not directed by the ſame principle.

Whatſoever affairs paſs ſuch a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends, which muſt needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his maſter. Bacon's Eſſays.

4. Irregular; anamalous; deviating from ſtated and conſtant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, ſeems eccentrick and irregular. King Charles

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, becauſe it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden's Dedicat. to the Conqueſt of Granada.

Then from whate'er we can to ſenſe produce,
Common and plain, or wond'rous and abſtruſe,
From nature's conſtant or eccentrick laws,
The thoughtful ſoul this gen'ral inference draws,
That an effect muſt preſuppoſe a cauſe. Prior

ECCENTRICITY n. ſ. [from eccentrick]

1. Deviation from a center.
2. The ſtate of having a different center from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal Brown's Vulgar Errours.

By reaſon of the ſun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally Holder

3. Excurſion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for ſo I account favourites abroad, met no good news of the Cadiz attempt. Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the diſtance between the focus and the center of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

E'CHINUS. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. A hedgehog
2. A ſhellfiſh ſet with prickles.
3. [With botaniſts.] The prickly head, cover of the ſeed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughneſs of the carving, reſembling the prickly rind of a cheſnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is uſed by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Compoſite orders, and generally ſet next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO. n. ſ. [ἠχω.]

1. Echo was ſuppoſed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a ſound for love of Narciſſus.

The pleaſant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo
In theſe woods to reſound the renowned name of a goddeſs. Sidney, b. i.

2. The return or repercuſſion of any ſound.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying ſhrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shak. Titus Andron.

The ſound, filling great ſpaces in arched vaults, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 242.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I ſing,
The woods ſhall anſwer, and the echo ring Pope's Summer.

'Tis not enough no harſhneſs gives offence,
The ſound muſt ſeem an echo to the ſenſe. Pope's Eſſ. Crit.

3. The ſound returned

What thou hunt?
Thy hounds ſhall make the welkin anſwer them,
And fetch ſhrill echoes from their hollow earth. Shakeſpeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!
With other echo late I taught your ſhades
To anſwer, and reſound far other ſong! Milt. Parad. Loſt.

To E'CHO v. n. To ſound back a voice, to return what has been uttered

Our modern ſeparatiſts do but echo the ſame note Decay of Piety.

With peals of ſhouts the Tyrians praiſe the ſong,
Thoſe peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng. Dryden's Æn.

One great death deforms the dreary ground,
The echo'd woes from diſtant rocks reſound. Pope.

ECLAIRCI'SSEMENT n. ſ. [French.] Explanation, the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expoſtulation.

ÉCLAT n. f. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprize, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other. Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLE'CTICK. adj. [ἐκλεκτικὸς] Selecting, chusing at will.

Cicero gives an account of the opinions of philosophers; but was of the eclectick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

ECLE'GMA. n. f. [ἐκ and λείχω.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE n. f. [ἔκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Slips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 413.

So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, being between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Locke

2. Darkness, obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life. Raleigh's History of the World.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses. King Charles

To ECLI'PSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign. Sandys.

Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Creech's Manilius.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. To cloud, to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune. Sidney.

Praise him to his father:
Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his. Denham's Sophy.

Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford. Dryden.

He descended from his father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh. Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him. Clarendon, b. vi.

Another now hath to himself engross'd
All pow'r, and us eclips'd Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

ECLI'PTICK. n. f. [ἐκλειπτικὸς.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the Zodiack, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°, 30', which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. It is this line which is drawn on the globe, and not the Zodiack. But in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs, each of which is denoted or distinguished by some asterism or constellation Harris

All stars, that have their distance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the Equator. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath; its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodward's Natural History, N° 6.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day,
The sun revolving through th' Ecliptick way,
Directs the various seasons of the year. Blackm. on the Creat.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the center of the sun, and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the center of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley's Sermons.

ECLOGUE. n. f. [ἐκλογὴ.] A pastoral poem so called, because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises han us gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECONOMY n. f. [οἰκονομία. This word is often written, from the derivation, œconomy, but œ being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority, so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden's State of Innocence, Preface.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift to Lord Bolingbroke.

3. Disposition of things, regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hamm.

4. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, we shall see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryden's Dedication to the Æn.

5. System of motions; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the framers said,
That, by a constant separation made,
They may a due economy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackm. Creat.

ECONOMICK, ECONOMICAL adj. [from the noun.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.

Her quick'ning power in ev'ry living part,
Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve,
And doth employ her economick art,
And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well fuelled. Wotton's Architect.

ECPHRA'CTICKS. n. f. [ἐκ and φράσσω.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphractick medicines. Harvey.

E'CSTASY. n. f. [ἔκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost

Follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to. Shakespeare's Tempest.

'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling.

Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Excessive joy, rapture.

O, love, be moderate! Allay thy ecstasy! Shakespeare.

The religious pleasure of a well disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy, but is like the pleasure of health, fit and sober. South's Sermons.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior.

A pleasure, which no language can express,
An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philips's Distrest Mother.

3. Enthusiasm, excessive elevation of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit, and hearken even to ecstasy.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety This is not now used

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd, where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction This sense is not now in use

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,

Like fweet bells jangled out of tune, and harſh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blaſted with ecſtaſy. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet

ECSTASIED. adj. [from ecſtaſy] Raviſhed, filled with enthuſiaſm.

Theſe are as common to the inanimate things as to the moſt ecſtaſied ſoul upon earth. Norris.

There doth my ſoul in holy viſion ſit,
In penſive trance, and anguiſh, and ecſtatick fit. Milton.

When one of them, after an ecſtatical manner, fell down before an angel, he was ſeverely rebuked, and bidden to worſhip God. Stillingfleet's Def. of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

In trance ecſtatick may thy pangs be drown'd,
Bright clouds deſcend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. In the higheſt degree of joy.

To gain Peſcennius one employs his ſchemes,
One graſps a Cecrops in ecſtatick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This ſenſe is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I have in me a great deal of ecſtatical love, which continually carries me out to good without myſelf. Norris.

ECTYPE. n. ſ. [ἔκτυπος.] A copy.

Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton's Agoniſtes

The French king was again ejected when our king ſubmitted to the church. Dryden's Preface to Rel. Laici.

3. To expel, to drive away; to diſmiſs with hatred.

We are peremptory to diſpatch
This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,
Were but our danger; and to keep him here,
Our certain death, therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

4. To caſt away; to reject.

To have ejected whatſoever the church doth make account of, be it never ſo harmleſs in itſelf, and of never ſo ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be uſed by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended [illegible]

Will any man ſay, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament eyected out of the Engliſh tongue, we ſhould all awake next morning chaſte and temperate? Swift.

EJECTION n. ſ. [ejectio Latin.]

1. Which ſoever of the two, whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakeſp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

So like in arms theſe champions were,
As they had been a very pair,
Nor [illegible] could moſt wear,
That either had been either. Drayton's Nymp.

Goring made a falſe friendſhip with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon, b. VII.

I do not aſk whether bodies do ſo exiſt, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the queſtion for or againſt a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the proceſs of natural beings, there ſeem ſome to be creatures placed, as it were, in the confines of ſeveral provinces, and participating ſomething of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the ſun has either tropick view'd,
The Winter baniſh'd, and the Spring renew'd. Dryd. Virg.

EI'THER adv. [from the noun.] A diſtributive adverb, anſwered by or; either the one or.

We never heard of any ſhip that had been ſeen to arrive upon any ſhore of Europe, no nor of either the Eaſt or Weſt Indies. Bacon's New Atlantis.

What perils ſhall we find,
If either place, or time, or other courſe,
Cauſe us to alter th' order now aſſign'd? Daniel's C. War.

Either your brethren have miſerably deceived us, or pow confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childleſs eld. Milton.

ELDER adj. The comparative of old, now corrupted to old. [illegible] having the privileges of primogeniture.

They bring the compariſon of younger daughters conforming themſelves in nature to the example of their elder ſiſters. Hooker, b. v. ſ. 13.

Let ſtill the woman take
An elder than herſelf, ſo wears ſhe to him,
So ſways ſhe level in her huſband's heart Sh. Twelfth Night.
How I firmly am reſolv'd, you know,
That is, not to beſtow my youngeſt daughter
Before I have a huſband for the elder. Sh. Taming of the Shrew.
The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the ſame meaſure the father did among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple ſtands;
Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame exceli'd. Pope's Temp. of Fame.

ELDERS n. ſ. [from elder.]

1. Perſons whoſe age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.
Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren 1 Tim. v. 1.
Our elders ſay,
The barren, touched in this holy chaſe,
Shake off their ſteril curſe. Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.
Among the Lacedæmonians, the chief magiſtrates, as they were, ſo they are called, elder men. Raleigh's H. of the World.
The bluſhing youth their virtuous awe diſcloſe,
And from their ſeats the reverend elders roſe Sandys.
the goode, if it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before ye. L'Eſtrange.
I loſe my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are cenſur'd, not as bad, but new,
While, if our elders break all reaſon's laws,
Thoſe fools demand not pardon, but applauſe. Pope.

3. Thoſe who are older than others.
At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to ſay amen. Hooker.
4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.
5. [In the New Teſtament.] Eccleſiaſticks.
6. [Among preſbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in ſeſſions, preſbyteries, ſynods and aſſemblies.
Flea-bitten ſynod, an aſſembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders and; like the rude
Chaos of preſbytry, where laymen rule
With the tame woolpack clergy by their ſide. Cleaveland.

ELDER. n. ſ. [elhara, Saxon.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood; the flowers are monopetalous, divided into ſeveral ſegments, and expand in form of a roſe: theſe are, for the moſt part, collected into an umbel, and are ſucceeded by ſoft ſucculent berries, having three ſeeds in each. It may be eaſily propagated from cuttings or ſeeds, but the former, being the moſt expeditious method, is generally practiſed. The ſeaſon for planting their cuttings is any time from September to March, thruſting them ſix or eight inches into the ground. Dwarf elder is near London propagated for medicinal uſe. Miller.

Look for thy reward
Amongſt the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overſhades the mouth of that ſame pit. Sh. Tit. And.
Then ſeek the bank where flowering elders crowd. Thom.

ELDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both ſexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread ſoftly when I am giddy. Swift to Pope.

ELDERSHIP. n. ſ. [from elder.]

1. Seniority, primogeniture.
That all ſhould Alcbech adore, 'tis true,
But ſome reſpects to my birthright due.
My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our leaſt of fears,
If Memnon's intereſt did not prop his cauſe. Rowe.
2. Preſbytery; eccleſiaſtical ſenate; kirk-ſeſſion.
Here were the ſeeds ſown of that controverſy which ſprang up between Beza and Fraſtus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of neceſſity certain choſen out from amongſt the laity for that purpoſe. Hooker, Preface.

ELDEST adj. The ſuperlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealo, ealdon, ealdeſte, Saxon.]

1. The oldeſt; the child that has the right of primogeniture.
We will eſtabliſh our eſtate upon
Our eldeſt Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.
The mother's and her eldeſt daughter's grace,
It ſeems, had brib'd him to prolong their ſpace. Dryden.

2. The

2. The perſon that has lived moſt years.

Eldeſt patents ſignifies either the oldeſt men and women that have had children, or thoſe who have longeſt had iſſue. Locke.

ELECAMPA'NE. n. ſ. [helenium, Latin.] A plant, named alſo ſtarwort

It hath a radiated flower, whoſe florets are hermaphrodite, but the ſemi-florets are female. both theſe are yellow. The ovaries reſt on a naked placenta, crowned with down: all theſe parts are included in a ſcaly cup To theſe notes may be added, the leaves growing alternately on the ſtalks, and the flowers on the top of the branches. Botaniſts enumerate thirty ſpecies of this plant. The firſt is the true elecampane, uſed in medicines. it grows wild in moſt fields and meadows, and is cultivated in gardens, to furniſh the ſhops with roots, which is the only part of the plant in uſe. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German ſpice. Hill's Mat. Med.

To ELE'CT. v. a. [electus, Latin.]

1. To chooſe for any office or uſe, to take in preference to others.

Henry his ſon is choſen king, though young,
And Lewis of France, elected firſt, begun [illegible]
This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whoſe conſent he was choſen, elected a hundred ſenators out of the commoners. Swift on the Diſſenſions in Athens and Rome.

2. [In theology] To ſelect as an object of eternal mercy.

Some I have choſen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the reſt ſo is my will. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

ELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Choſen, taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, theſe reverend fathers,
Of ſingular integrity and learning;
Yea, the elect of the land, who are aſſembl'd
To plead your cauſe. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

2. [illegible]

The biſhop elect takes the oaths of ſupremacy, canonical obedience, and againſt ſimony, and then the dean of the arches reads and ſubſcribes the ſentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology] Choſen as an object of eternal mercy

A vitious liver, believing that Chriſt died for none but the elect, ſhall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

ELE'CTION. n. ſ. [electio, Latin]

1. The act of chuſing, the act of ſelecting one or more from a greater number for any uſe or office; choice.

If the election of the miniſter ſhould be committed to every ſeveral pariſh, do you think that they would chuſe the meeteſt. Whitgift.

I was ſorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

Him, not thy election,
But natural neceſſity, begot. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x.

As charity is, nothing can more increaſe the luſtre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application to them Sprat's Sermons.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moſt [illegible]
Which hath a judging wit, and chuſing will
Now, if God's power ſhould her election bind,
Her motions then would ceaſe, and ſtand all blind Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the ſinners to turn themſelves and live; he tells us, that he has ſet before us life and death, and referred to our own election which we will chuſe. Rogers's Sermons.

4. [In theology] The predetermination of God by which any were ſelected for eternal life.

The concert about abſolute election to eternal life, ſome enthuſiaſts entertaining, have been made remiſs in the practice Atterbury's Sermons.

Since the late diſſolution of the club, many perſons put up for the next election. Addiſon's Spectator, N°. 550.

ELE'CTIVE adj. [from elect] Exerting the power of choice; [illegible] dated or beſtowed by election or choice.

will ſay poſitively and reſolutely, that it is impoſſible an elective monarchy ſhould be ſo free and abſolute as an here-

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction, for where there is force, there can be no choice wherein all moral goodneſs conſiſteth in the elective act of the underſtanding well. Grew's Coſmol. Sac.

The laſt change of their government, from elective to he- has made it ſeem hitherto of leſs force, and unfitter on abroad. Temple.

VELY adv. [from elect] By choice; with preference of one to another

How or why that ſhould have ſuch an influence upon the ſpirits, as to drive them into thoſe muſcles electively, I am not ſubtile enough to diſcern. Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon propoſing to themſelves an end of their operations. Grew's Coſm. Sac.

ELE'CTOR. n. ſ. [from elect]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer

From the new world her ſilver and her gold
Came, like a tempeſt, to confound the old,
Feeding with theſe the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone ſhe gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperour.

ELE'CTORAL. adj. [from elector] Having the dignity of an elector

ELE'CTORATE. n. ſ. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his ſon-in-law; and can himſelf command, when he pleaſes, the whole ſtrength of an electorate in the empire. Addiſon's Freeholder, N° 24.

ELE'CTRE. n. ſ. [electrum, Latin.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one ſpecies of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that ſo attract the epithet [illegible]

2. A mixed metal.

Change ſilver plate or veſſel into the compound ſtuff, being a kind of ſilver electre, and turn the reſt into coin. Bacon.

ELECTRICAL. ELECTRICK. } adj. [from electrum. See ELECTRE.]

1. Attractive without magnetiſm; attractive by a peculiar property, ſuppoſed once to belong chiefly to amber

By electrick bodies do I conceive not ſuch only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber, but ſuch as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

An electrick body can by friction emit an exhalation ſo ſubtile, and yet ſo potent, as by its emiſſion to cauſe no ſenſible diminution of the weight of the electrick body, and to be expanded through a ſphere, whoſe diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the diſtance of above a foot from the electrick body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electrick body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wonderous what Helmont delivereth concerning a glaſs, wherein the magiſtery of loadſtone was prepared, which remained an attractive quality Brown's Vulgar Errours.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glaſs, the electrick vapour, excited by friction, will, by daſhing againſt the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into ſuch an agitation as to emit light. Newton's Opt.

ELECTRICITY. n. ſ. [from electrick. See ELECTRE.] A property in ſome bodies, whereby, when rubbed ſo as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or ſuch like ſubſtances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the induſtry of the preſent age, firſt excited by the experiments of Gilbert, has diſcovered in electricity a multitude of phyſiological wonders. Bodies electrified by a ſphere of glaſs, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with ſuch a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if diſcharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared inſtantaneous, perſons at both ends of a long chain feeling to be ſtruck at once. The philoſophers are now endeavouring to intercept the ſtrokes of [illegible]ning.

ELECTUARY. n. ſ. [electarium, Caius's Aurel. which is now written electuary] A form of medicine made of conſerves, and powders, in the conſiſtence of honey. The form is attended with conſiderable inconveniences, for electuaries, generally made up with honey, or ſyrup, when the conſiſtence is too thin, are apt to ferment, and when too thick, to candy. By both which the ingredients will either be entirely altered in their nature, or impaired in their virtues. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no [illegible] except ſugar, common to any two of them Boyle's Works.

ELEEMOSYNARY. adj. [illegible]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity.

It is little better than an abſurdity, that the cauſe ſhould be an eleemoſynary for its ſubſiſtence to its effects, as a nature poſterior to and dependent on itſelf Glanv. Scepſ. c. 18.

2. Given in charity.

ELEGA'NCE. ELEGA'NCY } n. ſ. [elegantia, Latin] Beauty of art rather ſoothing than ſtriking; beauty without grandeur.

St. Auguſtine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes ſome difference. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

Theſe queſtions have more propriety, and elegancy, underſtood of the old world. Burnet.
